2,500 Slain, Rebels Claim Major Defeat Of Loyalists

Columns of Insurgents Reported Within Few Miles of Capital.

Alcazar Drenched By Gasoline, Fired

Imminent Capture With No More Losses to Non-Combatants Awaited.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Lisbon, Sept. 20.—Thousands of Spaniards were reported killed today when rebel columns, driving on Madrid from Talavera, launched a terrific attack on poorly equipped, inexperienced Militia defending that vital sector.

Rebels claimed a crushing defeat of Madrid's main army, with more than 2,500 loyalists killed and many times that number wounded or captured.

Insurgent casualties were not announced. Fighting was continuous all through the Sabbath. Loyalist defenders were demoralized, rebels claimed.

If these reports are true, Madrid is in grave danger. If the rebels won a victory of the magnitude claimed on the western front, their columns tonight were within 35 miles of the capital on a main road leading straight to Madrid.

Insurgents Advancing

A United Press correspondent with the advancing rebels confirmed that a major battle was raging between Santa Olalla and Marqueda, and that the insurgents, led by Moors, were pushing the Loyalists before them and advancing at the rate of 5 miles a day. Casualties were heavy, he said.

To the north, a correspondent reported, strong rebel forces were even closer. Reynolds Packard said that from a rebel observation post in the Guadarrama Mountains, less than 30 miles from Madrid, he could see the capital through field glasses.

"I can see dozens of miles in all directions," Packard said, "and every indication is that the northern rebel army can push forward toward Madrid whenever it pleases."

The desperate plight of rebels besieged in the Alcazar at Toledo spurred Gen. Emilio Mola's columns in the Talavera-Santa Olalla sector. A telling defeat of the Loyalist army there not only would open the way to Madrid but would permit relief of the Alcazar garrison.

Alcazar Fought With Fire.

This morning loyalists besieging the men, women and children in the cellars of the Alcazar, added fire to the weapons employed against the garrison, unsuccessfully, for more than two months. Artillery and aerial bombardment, dynamite mines, machine guns and bayonet charges had reduced the "West Point" of Spain to a ruin of piled stone—but the rebel garrison still fought stubbornly.

Mola launched squadron after squadron of bombing and pursuit planes against the loyalists' Talavera and Santa Olalla lines, followed closely by waves of Moors and Foreign Legionnaires, the fiercest fighters on the bloody peninsula. The rebels appeared to be superior in the air, and of the few loyalist planes to oppose the attack, at least one was shot down in flames.

Rebel radio reports said insur-

Lieut. H. G. Hazard, Naval Ace, Suicide As Wife Looks On

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 20 (A).—Lieut. Harold G. Hazard, U. S. N., 37, widely known naval aviator, shot and killed himself early today in a bedroom of his apartment here.

His wife told police she witnessed the shooting, but was unable to prevent it. Her 10-year-old son by a previous marriage was asleep in another bedroom. Dr. C. D. J. MacDonald, city coroner, listed the death as a suicide. No definite motive was announced.

Hazard was regarded as a pilot of unusual ability. In 1934 and 1935 he was inspector of naval aircraft at the Glenn L. Martin Co. in Baltimore. He was attached to the U. S. S. Yorktown.

A Giant Boondoggle

St. Louis has been shaken by revelations of staggering election frauds engineered in behalf of a boondoggling project rivaling the Florida ship canal and the Quoddy tide-harnessing project.

Felix Bruner, a member of Post's staff reporting national political developments, and now with Gov. Landon's party in the West, has visited St. Louis, where he has prepared a highly interesting series of three stories describing the project and the frauds.

Forced Indoors By Rain, G.A.R. Hears Freeman

Barely more than a corporal's guard of the 900 G. A. R. veterans in the city was able to face the chill, damp weather at the principal opening-day exercises of their final encampment, as the conclave got under way yesterday with services at Washington Cathedral.

Forced by rain to assemble in the great vaulted nave instead of outdoors around the Peace Cross as originally planned, about 18 veterans heard the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, touch on international affairs in his welcome.

"We all have confidence that this Nation," the bishop told them as he spoke over a national radio hookup, "whose unity you fought to preserve, is to be a mighty factor in the adjustment of those confused and confusing questions that now harass the nations of the world.

"Out of a condition that threatened the security of the republic, we have grown to such stature that we occupy a place of incomparable power."

Oley Nelson, 93-year-old national commander, his voice firm and booming, greeted the assemblage of 500 in behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic, and took time out to say hello to his folks back home in Slater, Iowa, an incident which drew a broad smile from the bishop.

Blind Veterans Attend.

While many of his aged comrades thought it inadvisable to venture out, A. M. Lothrop, of 1321 Euclid street northwest, crippled and blind at 95, was determined to go, and was carried to and from his front pew by friends.

The old fighter's hearing is almost gone, but as the verses of "Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!" reverberated from the choir and congregation, his lips slowly moved with the words.

The services over, the handful of veterans trudged with faltering step down the long aisle while the assemblage stood back, silently waiting. First act in the dramatic seventieth and last encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic was over.

Earlier in the day with a fine rain sifting on their bared white heads, another small group stood at attention at Fort Stevens, while a Marine bugler sounded taps. The occasion was the unveiling of a new monument commemorating President Lincoln's escape from rifle fire of soldiers of Gen. Early in the Confederate advance on Washington. The spot is at Thirteenth and Quackenbos streets.

C. Marshall Finnan accepted the monument on behalf of the National Parks Service, from the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, of which Agnes Upell Boyce is national president.

Edith Maxwell Visits Capital; Enjoys Freedom From Starers

Mountain Girl Sees White House and Capitol, Goes to Picture Show, But Biggest Thrill Is Ability to Mix Inconspicuously in Crowds.

By Edward T. Folliard.

Edith Maxwell, 22-year-old mountain school teacher, who was released on $6,000 bond Saturday after a year and two months in jail, was a visitor to Washington yesterday.

She saw the White House, the Capitol and the other glories of the city, dodged the heavy Sunday traffic, attended a downtown movie and last night rejoined friends in nearby Virginia.

Her greatest thrill came from being able to move about the city without being stared at. In her case this amounted almost to a luxury.

Since that July night in 1935 when she was arrested for the "slipper murder" of Trigg Maxwell, her mountaineer father, Edith had not known the joy of walking along with a throng, unconscious of self and free from staring eyes.

When she was in jail, first at Wise and then at Jonesville, Va., in the Cumberland Mountains, she was pointed out as the girl who "killed her daddy."

When, after her release on bond Saturday, she accompanied her attorney, Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, and her brother, Earl Maxwell, to the Liberty Cafe in nearby Norton, a large crowd gathered outside to stare at her—the "girl who killed her daddy."

She said she didn't mind it, but it was noticeable that her appetite disappeared.

Not all of those who stared meant to be rude. A number of them, in fact, came forward to offer a friendly hand and wish her well.

"I hope you come clear, Edith," some said.

To an outsider, the most remarkable aspect of the situation with respect to the Edith Maxwell case down in the mountains, is the character of the comment. Bill ——, one is told, is "for Edith," while Jim —— is "against Edith."

Evidence Rarely Discussed.

There is little discussion of the evidence in the case. It is mostly who is "for" and who is "against" Edith. The circumstance that Edith struck her father with a slipper while he, in a drunken rage, was beating her and threatening to kill her, is rarely mentioned. Neither is the circumstance that Edith ran for a doctor when, an hour later, her father collapsed.

The possibility—even probability in the eyes of at least some medical authorities—that Trigg Maxwell did not die from the slipper blow, but perhaps from a stroke of apoplexy like so many members of his family, is discussed hardly at all.

However, natives of Wise County say there has been a noticeable change of attitude with regard to Edith in the last ten days. There is now, they say, a disposition to feel that a rehearing of the case would be a good thing.

The Wise County jury which

4 Die in Cuba; Church, Paper Are Dynamited

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Havana, Cuba, Sept. 20.—Dynamite wrecked the newspaper El Pais today, demolished a Catholic church 45 minutes before the first Sunday mass, killed four persons and spread damage throughout the city's metropolitan area.

At least 20 persons were injured.

Police investigating the blast arrested 20 members of the Spanish Socialist Circle and raided the organization's offices.

The Spanish Socialist Circle has been an outspoken champion of the "Popular Front" government in Spain. In a series of handbills it has attacked local newspapers.

El Pais, sympathetic in editorials to rebels in the Spanish civil war, circulates widely among Spanish resident here.

Break Dynamite Wires.

Police prevented dynamiting of the conservative newspaper Diario de la Marina by breaking wires attached to 1,000 sticks of dynamite outside the plant.

Only a few statues remained to verify the site of the church, Nuestra Senora de Monserrate, across the street from El Pais. The altar, pews, ceiling and walls were destroyed.

Debris was spread over a wide area.

Parts of the truck in which the dynamite was cached outside El Pais were spread more than eight blocks. Front fenders were found eight blocks from the tires. The twisted chassis and motor were carried a block from the newspaper.

Windows Shattered.

For three blocks along Neptuno street, busy shopping area, every window was shattered by the blast.

Official sources withheld comment, but in some informed circles

Sarah Churchill Says Troth Rumor Is 'Unauthorized'

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Sarah Churchill, daughter of Winston Churchill, British statesman, arrived on the liner Bremen today, and said that all rumors about her engagement to Vic Oliver, comedian, were "unauthorized."

Miss Churchill was quoted in London as saying she was coming to this country to marry Oliver.

To most questions she replied:

"I am very glad to be in America."

Oliver, who went down the bay to meet Miss Churchill, said no statement would be made by Miss Churchill or himself until tomorrow, when her brother, Randolph, arrives on the Queen Mary. Previously, Oliver denied he was engaged to Miss Churchill, and said he thought she was coming to America to get a theatrical job.

"Any statements attributed to me in London were unauthorized," Miss Churchill said. "I will not say anything about my personal affairs until my brother, Randolph, arrives tomorrow."

Sheriff Fights $1,000 Reward For Woman Who Betrayed Sons

By the Associated Press.

Yreka, Calif., Sept. 20.—Whether a gray-haired mountain woman would receive a $1,000 reward for surrendering her two sons for prosecution on a triple murder charge worried county officials today.

Sheriff W. G. Chandler announced he would recommend against payment of the money to Mrs. A. J. Brite, 64, who led District Attorney James Davis to the hiding place of her boys, John and Coke Brite, on the prosecutor's promise to protect them against lynching.

Chairman William Davidson of the county supervisors, who offered the reward for apprehension of the brothers "dead or alive," said he "rather doubted" whether "Mom" Brite was eligible.

Prosecutor Davis, who sped the brothers 400 miles to Folsom Prison for safekeeping pending trial, expressed the belief Mrs. Brite was legally entitled to the reward.

"Even if the Brite parents are entitled to the reward legally they are not entitled to it morally," said Sheriff Chandler. "They did not surrender their sons for reward, but only for safety."

The sheriff also said he had evidence that the elder Brites were in communication with their sons during the three weeks in which a large posse hunted them in the mountains.

The posse was still after the brothers when their mother called them into custody.

Lynch threats ran high after two peace officers and a vacationer had been slain while attempting to arrest the Brite brothers on an assault charge.

Soil, Crop Aid Survey Begun By Roosevelt

Former to Recommend Legislation, Latter to Survey Resources.

President Roosevelt last night moved to set in operation "at the earliest possible moment" the Administration's long-time drought and land-use program.

He appointed two committees, headed by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Rural Electrification Administrator Morris L. Cooke.

The former committee will study crop insurance and will recommend legislation to embody its conclusions. The President suggested "it may be found wise for the first year to limit the application of the plan to one or two major crops for a start" The second committee will study improved land use in the drought areas.

The crop-insurance committee will "work out permanent measures guarding farmers and consumers," suggested the President, against two kinds of emergencies, price collapses resulting from surpluses, and crop failures resulting from droughts.

Measures resulting from this committee's recommendations will serve to protect farmers' incomes, protect consumers against food shortages and price extremes, and assist business and employment "through providing an even flow of farm supplies and the establishing of stability in farm-buying power," said Mr. Roosevelt in a letter to Secretary Wallace announcing his appointment as head of the committee.

In a second letter to Cooke the President asked that the land-use committee report to him not later than January 1, prepared to offer a "long-term program for the efficient utilization of the resources of the Great Plains area."

The President said he is "anxious that we leave no stone unturned in exploring and reporting on all the possibilities of this region, as one in which reasonable standards of living can be maintained by the largest possible population."

Appointment of the first committee by the President last night shortly before he left for Hyde Park followed public suggestions by Wallace for a plan under which the farmers would put part of their crops in good growing years into pools from which they would draw in leaner years. This would act to prevent the destruction of price structures in good years and provide an insurance against crop failures in other years.

The President said in his letter to Wallace, "I am especially interested in its studies (the Department of Agriculture) of a plan providing for the payment of premiums and insurance in commodities."

In the absence of Wallace, Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, is to act as chairman, the President's letter said.

Three Others Named.

Other members of the Crop Insurance committee will be H. R. Tolley, administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration; Wayne C. Taylor, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Ernest G. Draper, Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

The President advised the committee to utilize extensive crop insurance studies now being made in the Department of Agriculture. He stipulated that final recommendations for legislation "should be formulated with the advice and assistance of national farm organization leaders so that the plans can be submitted to Congress with the approval and support of the representatives of the farmers."

The President said that the price collapse resulting from unmarketable surpluses and the crop failures from droughts would "have had devastating consequences to consumers and business as well as farmers," except for "Government action to assist farmers."

"The time has come," the President said, "to work out permanent measures." " " After outlining the safeguards the crop insurance system should provide for consumers, farmers and business, he added:

"Since 1933, the AAA payments have proved their usefulness to

Warburg Aids Landon, Refuting Hints of Latter's Anti-Semitism

Praises Kansan's Views; G. O. P. Aids Charge Whisper Campaign.

By Felix Bruner.

A Special Correspondent.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 20.—A statement by Felix M. Warburg, of New York, prominent Jewish leader, indorsing Gov. Alf. M. Landon for President was made public at Landon's office here today.

Publication of the statement was taken as recognition of the existence in the East and particularly in New York, of propaganda to the effect that Landon has anti-Semitic tendencies.

Warburg said in his statement:

"Gov. Landon's stand for opportunity of the individual, academic freedom and religious liberty, as expressed in his recent speeches and in his record, is in accordance with the best traditions of American democracy.

"Gov. Landon's emphasis in his recent speeches on economy in government and efficient operation of relief while at the same time stressing the necessity that no man or woman should starve, is, in my opinion, the proper approach to the problems that beset us. His emphasis on more employment for labor and fair treatment of business is the only safe basis for recovery, for we must have an expansion of present enterprise and new businesses must be encouraged.

"For these reasons I intend to vote for Gov. Landon."

Statement Is 'Lie,' Browder Declares

By Sidney Olson.

Charges that President Roosevelt was the unofficial candidate of the Reds, resulting in nation-wide newspaper publicity over the week-end, were repeated last night by Publisher William Randolph Hearst in a heated, lengthy statement cabled from Amsterdam.

The "Red Issue," raised early in the present Presidential campaign by Hearst, Father Coughlin, and others, thus was given added impetus by Hearst's reiteration of the charges which had been anticipated and dignified by a White House denial Saturday.

Hearst insisted last night that President Roosevelt does receive the support of Communists, Socialists, radicals and anarchists, "and that he has done his utmost in act and utterance while in office to secure and justify such support."

Support "Deserved."

Hearst explained that he had not said at any time that the President "willingly or unwillingly" received such support, but "he has done his best to deserve the support of all such disturbing and destructive elements."

Before the earlier charges were released Saturday, Stephen T. Early, a White House secretary, had forcefully denied in a statement that the President either wished or welcomed "the vote or support of any individual or group taking orders from alien sources."

The White House statement, referring only to "a notorious publisher," held that most Americans would ignore "fake issues which no honorable, patriotic, decent citizen would purposely inject into American affairs."

Among the charges made in Mr. Hearst's lengthy cabled statement last night were these:

That Hearst assumed Secretary Early's reference to a "notorious publisher" was directed at Hearst.

That Hearst had not said whether the President willingly or unwillingly received the support of "the Karl Marx socialists, the Frankfurter radicals, Communists and Anarchists, the Tugwell Bolsheviks, and the Richberg revolutionists which constitute the bulk of his following."

That the President "has done his best to deserve the support of all such disturbing and destructive elements."

That "he has since his election continually solicited the advice of Prof. Frankfurter and his fellow radicals and he has followed their guidance."

That "Mr. Roosevelt compelled the recognition of the bloody dictatorship of Stalin in Moscow."

That "for 50 years I have endeavored to serve my country as an honorable and patriotic journalist."

That "I do not think that Mr. Roosevelt has a great deal of knowledge."

"Liar," Browder Says.

Earl Browder, Presidential candidate of the Communist Party, said last night:

"It is no longer news that Hearst is a liar."

Denouncing the Hearst headline stating "Communists can join in supporting Roosevelt," he said:

"This particular lie was first cabled from Riga. Full evidence of its falsity has always been available to the public.

"Hearst and the Republicans are making a desperate effort to confuse the election.

"The Hearst-Landon campaign must indeed be weakening if it needs such desperate lies to bolster it up."

Several Senators here declined comment. The Soviet Embassy declined to make any official statement, although staff members intimated that the material described in the Hearst article contained "nothing new or startling."

Senator Robert M. La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive, said: "This is more of the same type of campaign being conducted by backers of Gov. Landon.

"Reactionaries who are supporting Landon are going to desperate lengths to divert the attention of

Jump Forecast In Coal Prices In Near Future

Shortage in Freight Cars May Force Rise, Says Producers' Group.

By the Associated Press.

A "material advance" in soft coal prices "commencing probably in the near future" was forecast yesterday by the National Coal Association.

With bituminous coal production approximately 27,000,000 tons ahead of the corresponding date last year, the association reported to its membership continuation of the trend may cause "a real shortage" of coal cars and force prices up.

Asserting the movement of coal already is "straining railroad facilities in some sections, the association and that industrial stocks of coal in dealers' yards were reported to be "subnormal and too low for safety."

Bureau of Mines officials have said the increased demand for coal, was due largely to heightened activity in so-called heavy industries, particularly steel.

"The railroads, while making desperate efforts to meet the demands for coal cars in all sections, are finding it quite difficult to do this in some localities," the association said. "Certain types of cars are not everywhere available in sufficient quantities to meet the demand. Coal car distribution rules have been put into effect on some lines which means that mines on such lines will receive less than their full car supply.

"Operators are reporting that some railroads are holding fuel in cars instead of unloading and releasing the equipment."

Announcing its intention of keeping the country informed weekly about conditions in the coal industry, the association indicated the question of transportation would be considered a leading contributing factor to any coal shortage or price increase.

"There can be no such thing as a shortage of coal at the mine," the association said, "as mines are equipped to produce a much greater quantity than can be transported."

In connection with supplies of coal above ground, the statement said industrial stock-piles of bituminous coal contained only 24,211,000 tons on August 1, compared with 32,272,000 tons on the same date a year ago.

Capital Schools To Open Today; 100,000 on Roll

Record Attendance Due; 3,000 Gain Expected as Classes Begin.

Back from the longest vacation they've ever had, nearly 100,000 young Washingtonians will fill the corridors and classrooms of the Capital's halls of learning this morning.

The first day of a new term begins at 9 o'clock and all who aren't there on the dot—well, there's no use rubbing in the gloomy part of this back-to-school business.

School officials believe there will be a record first-day attendance. In the first place, the term is a week late in getting started and many of the pupils who have been away for the summer have had plenty of time to get back home before school opens.

Secondly, much of the preliminary work of registering and assigning pupils is done. Those who will be new in the system registered last week and today the stage is set for lessons to begin.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, expects a gain of at least 3,000 or 4,000 in his school family. Any delay in getting classes into normal stride probably will result from this increase. While some schools will not be affected seriously, others are expected to be badly overcrowded and adjustments will be necessary before routine work gets under way.

Only One New School.

Of the nearly 100,000 pupils, hardly more than 1,000 will start the new year in new classrooms. The new Bundy School for colored children, at O street between Fourth and Fifth, is the only new building to be opened this fall. A total of 26 more classrooms in recently completed wings and additions will furnish new accommodations for others.

The added facilities, however, will hardly more than begin to take care of the number of pupils represented in the expected enrollment increase, Dr. Ballou pointed out.

Vacancies, promotions and transfers in the school teaching and administrative staffs will bring many

Floes Trap Ship Taking Food to Polar Camp After Crew Risks Lives to Wait for Comrades

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 20.—The epic struggle of a handful of men against the Arctic winter was described here tonight in terse radio messages from the region of the North Pole.

The Russian ice-breaker Rusanoff was trapped off Randolph Island, September 9, by shifting ice while scientists and members of its crew were trudging across an ice floe carrying supplies for the establishment of the northernmost winter camp in the world.

The heroic decision to risk seeing their vessel crushed like an eggshell under them rather than abandon the men ashore left the expedition members tonight working desperately to free the sturdy 1,750-ton craft.

They believe they have less than a week in which to free the ship before the fast closing-in winter locks them behind walls of ice.

The ice-breaker Sadko, carrying another expedition of Soviet scientists, rushed to the rescue of the Rusanoff but was unable to approach it through the ice field.

The Rusanoff is more than a half-mile from open water and the Sadko would face the same fate if it attempted to penetrate the ice.

The crew of 65 men and the 17 explorers who planned to camp for the winter on Randolph Island, are fighting with steam, dynamite and water ballast to blast a path to open water or shake the Rusanoff free from its icy shackle.

The ship was caught suddenly. While crews were unloading equipment, buildings, fuel and other materials for the camp the wind shifted rapidly, packing the ice around it.

The Rusanoff was anchored within a mile from the island shore to which the men were sledging the supplies. With the shifting wind and the closing sea, the captain faced the choice of making a dash for open water or waiting for the landing parties to cross the jagged floes back to the ship. He waited.

The Sadko cannot stand by for more than a week because the whole Polar seas will have frozen over.

Officials are hopeful the Rusanoff will be able to free herself, but if the effort fails, the men are believed to be in no immediate danger. The ship carries supplies for six months and authorities believe they would be able to walk across the ice to Tikhaya Bay, if the freeze-over is hard enough.

They could be rescued from there by airplane.

The Sadko, equipped with wireless, is keeping Moscow informed of the struggle and is receiving instructions from experienced explorers huddled here over charts and tables who flash back ways the Rusanoff might be shaken free.

Landon Urged To Make Clear Stand on AAA

Roosevelt Farm Backer Says G. O. P. Suspected of Facing Two Ways.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—William H. Settle, chairman of the all party Roosevelt agricultural committee, asked Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, Republican Presidential nominee, tonight to "make clear" to the farmers "what he thinks" of the accomplishments of President Roosevelt's farm program.

Asserting that farmers "suspect the Republican Party of trying to face both ways at the same time," Settle said in an address over a farmland radio hook-up:

"Do you believe, Mr. Landon, that Republican members of Congress were serving the best interests of farmers when they voted last March 11 to adopt the new farm act?

"The members of your party in Congress voted 11 to 5 in the Senate and 64 to 19 in the House in favor of this bill.

"Do you believe, Mr. Landon, that agriculture is just a 'local matter' and that the AAA program 'invaded' the rights of States?

"If you do, why did you not speak out against such 'invasion' of the State of which you are Governor?

"Also, Mr. Landon, why did you wait until you became the nominee for President to refere to the AAA as 'restrictive and coercive?'

Cites Kansas Votes.

"Do you think, Mr. Landon, that the farmers of Kansas who signed 273,000 wheat contracts and 139,000 corn-hog contracts were coerced? were the farmers of Kansas who voted a year ago 71,768 to 10,291 to continue the wheat program 'coerced'?

"If Mr. Landon, you have been so disturbed about 'coercion,' why did you as Governor sign an act in Kansas which would empower the State government to enter a man's farm and engage in work regardless of whether the individual farmer wanted it done?"

Broadening his attack to include the whole Republican platform, Settle, for 15 years president of the Indiana Farm Bureau Federation, continued:

"It is apparent that your campaign is being conducted as against the farm program in the cities while you pay lip service to those programs in the West.

"You have attacked Federal spending, but at the same time declared against reducing payments to families on relief.

Queries Him on Relief.

"Does this mean, Mr. Landon, that the costs of relief would be transferred to States and local government units? If so, would you have States raise the money through increasing taxes on real estate, including farms?

"And does your opposition to Federal spending mean that you would reduce or abolish payments to farmers? You were reported as telling Senator Carey that you favored ending benefit payments to farmers. Then you were reported as telling Gov. Lowden (former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois) that you favored continuing them."

Concerning tariffs, Settle asked Landon to "reconcile * * * the strong support given the Roosevelt reciprocal trade agreement program by the Kansas City Star and the Emporia Gazette prior to the Republican National Convention * * * with the flat declaration in the Republican platform to repeal the reciprocal tariff act." The editors of the Star and the Gazette, Settle said, "are known to be among your closest advisers."

Roosevelt's Repudiation of 'Alien Support' Clears 'Communist' Picture.

By Franklyn Waltman

THE White House statement repudiating on behalf of President Roosevelt "the vote or support of any individual or group taking orders from alien sources" is a contribution to the clarification of an aspect of the current Presidential campaign.

With more fervor and heat than accuracy, the New Deal for many months past has been likened to the Communism of Soviet Russia. Intimations have come from people who should know better that at heart President Roosevelt was a Communist—although he also has been called a Kerensky—and time and again statements of certain New Dealers have been cited as paralleling exactly Communist manifestoes.

It is ridiculous even to intimate that the Squire of Hyde Park is a Communist. His entire background has been that of a bourgeois capitalist. If anything, the Roosevelt policies point more strongly toward fascism than they do to communism, although it is not intended here to call the President a Fascist.

But to keep on the track of this talk of Communism and the New Deal, the American spokesman for Communism—Earl Browder, the party's Presidential candidate—frequently has contended that the Communists can put no faith whatever in Mr. Roosevelt, that he flirts with the economic right too much to suit them and that the Communists cannot assume any responsibility for him.

But why does Mr. Browder say that? Why should he be so careful to disavow any responsibility for Mr. Roosevelt, if the latter is preaching a doctrine so directly opposed to communism as capitalism? The answer is apparent in every speech Mr. Browder makes. Although nominally the Communist Presidential candidate, Comrade Browder inferentially appeals in every address he makes to those sympathetic with his viewpoint to vote for Mr. Roosevelt this year.

Comrade Browder does this by declaring that from the Communist viewpoint the most essential objective in this year's Presidential campaign is the defeat of Gov. Alf M. Landon. The latter, he argues, stands for political principles obnoxious to Communist doctrine and he maintains that should the Kansas Governor be elected the proponents of Communism would be set back.

On the other hand, asserts Comrade Browder, and he is supported in this contention by sympathetic allies, the hope of the Communist movement in America is the formation of a strong Farmer-Labor party and that hope only can be realized if Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected.

So by Comrade Browder, by the New Republic, by numerous Communist and Socialist sources the appeal has gone out to those who would radically change the American economic and political system to support President Roosevelt this year. In other words, taking a realistic view of the situation, these groups believe that President Roosevelt will far better serve their purpose than Gov. Landon.

* * * *

This much is clear and I think indisputable. It was pointed out without subsequent challenge in this place last July after Comrade Browder's address at the University of Virginia. In many other places the contention has been made that the major part of Communist vote — negligible, though it is—would go this year to Mr. Roosevelt. It should be mentioned that Norman Thomas, the Socialist Presidential candidate, has not joined in this movement, but has fought it—crying out a plague on the houses of both Roosevelt and Landon.

But, the fact that Mr. Roosevelt may be the choice of the Communists for President does not make him a Communist, any more than the support of Gov. Landon by financial pirates makes him a willing tool of the schemers and defrauders in Wall Street or elsewhere.

Mr. Roosevelt, through Mr. Early, has repudiated Communist support. It might be said that in less dramatic fashion Mr. Landon in his Portland speech a week ago repudiated the support of those who think his election might further their designs to exploit the American people through monopolistic practices or shady stock deals.

The Kansas Governor on that occasion warned those who did not subscribe to his philosophy of a free enterprise—which he interpreted as keeping private exploiters, as well as the Government, off the back of the average man—not to vote for him. And it might also be mentioned that in his Portland speech Gov. Landon gave his blessings to the New Deal legislation regulating the issuance of and trading in securities.

* * * *

Entirely too much importance can be attached to Communist support of Mr. Roosevelt—and it has been in some newspapers. Reference to it serves only the purpose of indicating that some of the things Mr. Roosevelt has done appeal to the Communists. The nature of these things need debating—not the Communist support.

Instead of the White House getting itself into a state of white anger because the Hearst newspapers print declarations that the Communists are supporting Mr. Roosevelt, the President would better serve the country by enlightening it as to his present attitude toward certain specific and fundamental issues, as, for instance, the NRA, other proposals based on limitation of production and how far he intends to go in the direction of Government ownership.

Give the people light on these questions and they will find their way, despite the confusion of political labels and tags. Mr. Early's statement engendered considerable heat—as witness Mr. Hearst's retort—but it cast little light.

the voters from the real issues of the campaign. Realizing the disastrous effects of the disclosures recently of du Pont, Morgan and other big business support for Gov. Landon, his chief supporters now are trying the old power trust game of dragging a red herring across the trail.

"Citizens throughout the country are too intelligent to fall for such an obvious trick."

Newspaper Comment.

The New York Times, in an editorial, said:

"How can the President be injured by all of this? He cannot prevent Communists from voting for him if they choose. * * * But he can let them know, as he has now done, that he abhors their political ideas and will oppose in every way the carrying out of their secret and sinister schemes. * * * In the most explicit and official manner President Roosevelt had before let the world know that he resented anything like political interference in this country by Soviet agents. * * * We now have no ambassador in Moscow and probably will not for some time to come."

From Moscow came a United Press dispatch that Soviet officials refused there to comment on the situation.

The Hearst papers have recently denounced John L. Lewis, leader of the Committee for Industrial Organization and head of labor's Non-Partisan League, as a possible Presidential candidate in 1940 under a "People's Front" communistic party. These two organizations were assailed in the Hearst article as "left wing." Lewis said last night:

"This is a malignant political conspiracy to defame the President without the vestige of a basis for the charges.

Holds Charge Ridiculous.

"It is ridiculous to assume that the President or any of his substantial supporters would desire the support of alien or subversive influences in the campaign.

"The voters of the country will not be deceived or influenced by this effort to discredit the President."

The White House had no comment last night. The President considers the incident closed, informed sources declared.

Many observers noted the fact that the date on which Hearst based his charges of Saturday, had been available for many months in Communist reports and magazine articles.

Browder pointed out that the Communist Party in this country is a separate entity, which "does not take orders from Moscow a la Hearst."

Speculation on the advance knowledge of the White House of the coming Hearst onslaught was coupled with a recent press conference statement by John D. M. Hamilton, Republican National Committee chairman, that he didn't want to comment on the labor vote, "because something big is going to happen to that in a few days."

The incident, without parallel, either in American journalism or in political campaign history, was interpreted variously as to its effectiveness in raising the Red issue. Many New Dealers, while declining to comment officially, held that the President had effectively forestalled Hearst. Others declared the issue would cause lively discussion from now on.

Text of Statement by Hearst

"The President has issued a statement through a secretary. He has not had the frankness to say to whom he refers in the statement, nor has he had the sincerity to state his complaint accurately.

"Nevertheless, since his conglomerate party of Socialists, Communists and renegade Democrats has consistently, and rather ridiculously, tried to make me an issue in their muddled campaign, I think I am justified in assuming that I am the object of the statement and that I may courteously endeavor to correct Mr. Roosevelt's misstatements and to set him right.

"Wherefore, let me say that I have not stated at any time whether the President willingly or unwillingly received the support of the Karl Marx Socialists, the Frankfurter Radicals, Communists and Anarchists, the Tugwell Bolsheviks and the Richberg Revolutionists which constitute the bulk of his following.

Reiterates Charge.

"I have simply said and shown that he does receive the support of these enemies of the American system of government, and that he has done his best to deserve the support of all such disturbing and destructive elements.

"Mr. Roosevelt was elected on the Democratic platform and on the pledges he made continually throughout his whole campaign to support the Democratic platform in its entirety and to carry out its provisions scrupulously.

"He was no sooner elected than he repudiated the Democratic platform and the established policies of the Democratic Party since its inception and adopted the platform of the Karl Marx Socialists in almost every word and letter.

"Solicited Advice."

"He has since his election continually solicited the advice of Prof. Frankfurter and his fellow radicals and he has followed their guidance.

"He has sent Secretary Tugwell (Undersecretary of Agriculture) to preach Bolshevik doctrines throughout the country, to arry class against class, and to urge that the farmers and the workers 'surge forward'—as, by the way, they have been doing so conspicuously in Spain—to establish a class government in complete contrast and contravention to all American ideals and principles.

"He has made Mr. Richberg the special and particular mouthpiece of the Administration, and it is Mr. Richberg who has said exultingly that 'revolution is not coming—it is here.'"

Russia's Recognition Cited.

"Furthermore, Mr. Roosevelt compelled the recognition of the bloody dictatorship of Stalin in Moscow—a dictatorship born in riot and revolution and sustained by murder and plunder—a dictatorship which has starved to death over 5,000,000 wretched farmers in order to rob them of their grain and sell it abroad to get money to maintain the red army which keeps the precious example of popular government in power.

"Mr. Roosevelt has continued to recognize this dictatorship, together with a dictator who is so much the idol and true representative of his oppressed people that when he travels from Moscow to his home in the country, he goes in an armored train with another armored train ahead of him and another armored train behind him, lest his people who love him so much would retaliate on him for the murder of so many of their fellow countrymen.

"If I can say so without offense, I do not think that Mr. Roosevelt has a great deal of knowledge. His Administration has proved that.

"Still, he surely must know that this bolshevik tyrant in Moscow—whom he has recognized—continually plots and plans and openly advocates the overthrow of all established form of government in other nations, including the overthrow of the republic of the United States, founded in liberty by our fathers.

"Mr. Roosevelt must know that this Bolshevist tyranny openly proposes to secure the overthrow of the American system of government by the boring from within which Prof. Frankfurter preaches, the 'surging forward of the workers and the farmers,' in class conflict which Mr. Tugwell advocates, and the active and actual revolution which Mr. Richberg hails as here.

Holds "Violence Fostered."

"Mr. Roosevelt must know that this bolshevik tyranny which he recognized urges the use of any means fair or foul, of any method of suasion or deception, or force or violence, in order to accomplish their revolutionary purposes.

"And if Mr. Roosevelt does not know these things, he may read them all in the gospel of the evangel of communistic revolution, Karl Marx, or he can see them actually occurring in Spain in the course of the application of these communistic policies.

"Moreover, if Mr. Roosevelt does not know that this Bolshevist tyranny in Russia has ordered all its Bolshevists, Socialists, Communists and revolutionists in the United States to support Mr. Roosevelt, he can read exactly that in the Isvestia, the organ which the Bolshevist tyranny supports and subsidizes, the organ which is protected and publicly proclaimed as the mouthpiece of Moscow.

"Whether in recognition of the class conflict which Mr. Roosevelt and his following preach, whether in recognition of Mr. Roosevelt's Communist practices and performances in office, whether in recognition of the contempt for our American Constitution and our American institutions which Mr. Roosevelt has freely and frequently expressed, or whether merely in recognition of Mr. Roosevelt's recognition of the bloody tyranny at Moscow, the undeniable fact is that bolshevism supports Mr. Roosevelt and urges his election.

"However, I want to be perfectly fair to Mr. Roosevelt—and I have been.

"I do not say and I never have said what Mr. Roosevelt intimates safely through his secretary, that he willingly receives the support of the Communists and the Karl Marx Socialists and the Frankfurter radicals, and the Tugwell bolshevists and the Richberg revolutionists, and all the malcontents and disturbers in this country.

"I do not attempt to interpret the inner workings of his mind. Furthermore, I have never said by direct or indirect personal statement that he willingly or unwillingly, passively or impassively, receives the support of the bloody bolshevist tyranny at Moscow.

"I have simply said, and proved by actual and accurate quotation, that he does receive such support from the enemies of our system of government and that he has done his utmost in act and utterance while in office to secure and justify such support.

"I do not find any pleasure as an American in saying this of an American President, but it is the truth.

"And as I am not a shifty, prevaricating politician, but for over 50 years have endeavored to serve my country as an honorable and patriotic journalist, I am compelled in fairness to my readers to tell the truth.

"Especially must I do so since the future of our great country, its freedom from disastrous conditions which prevail over here in Europe, depend chiefly upon our people's realization of the truth and their thorough understanding of the dangerous trend of our Government toward the maelstrom of destruction called communism."

Bad Debt Loss In U. S. Slashed, Survey Shows

By the Associated Press.

The Commerce Department said yesterday the Nation's reail buyers are paying their bills more promptly, describing this as "one of the most encouraging aspects in the present business situation."

Alexander V. Dye, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, said a survey had shown "prompter payments on accounts receivable, lower losses from bad debts and increased credit sales," during 1935.

The study, which embraced 14 types of retail stores in 88 cities, said that bad debt losses on open credit sales were cut from 1 per cent in 1934 to six-tenths of 1 per cent last year. On installment sales, the losses fell from 2.4 to 1.5 per cent.

Measured by dollar volume, goods sold in 1935 increased 8 per cent over 1934, "with open credit and installment sales accounting for the bulk of the increase."

Last year, Dye reported, buyers met short term indebtedness to retailers on an average of every 63 days, or 4 days earlier than in 1934. For instalment accounts, the average was every 200 days last year, compared with 210 days in 1934.

Instalment sales increased 19 per cent over 1934 and open credit sales, 9 per cent. Cash sales turned upward only 3 per cent.

"This tends to show," the report said, "that credit granting had a stimulating effect on sales volume.

"Considered along with improvement in other types of credit activity as revealed by the statistics, indications are that certain safeguards to credit granting have not been sacrificed for increased business."

Hurricane Helps Zep In Fast Atlantic Trip

Lakehurst, N. J., Sept. 20 (AP).—The German Zeppelin Hindenburg completed a fast 59-hour westward crossing of the North Atlantic today with the help of the hurricane which spread ruin over the Eastern coast of the United States.

Capt. Ernst H. Lehmann, little skipper of the big airship, utilized high storm winds along the Southern cost of Nova Scotia during the last day to reach a maximum speed of 160 miles an hour.

The Hindenburg completed a 3,450 mile flight from Frankfort on the Main, Germany, to its base here at 5:43 a. m. (Eastern standard time) and was moored 12 minutes later.

Felix Warburg Backs Landon; Rumor Refuted

Jewish Leader's Praise of Views Held Reply to Anti-Semitic Hints.

companied by a letter addressed to Landon and signed by J. A. Harzfeld, special assistant to John Hamilton, Republican national chairman. Harzfeld declared that Warburg is "undoubtedly the outstanding Jewish leader in philanthropic, welfare and social service work in America." He pointed out that for 15 years Warburg has devoted himself almost entirely to philanthropic work, serving as officer and director in many Jewish and non-Jewish welfare organizations.

"With such interests in the fields of social service work and philanthropy," Harzfeld said, "I cannot overestimate the importance of what he has to say, and I am happy to inclose the statement which he has issued."

For a long time there have been coming to Gov. Landon reports of a whispering campaign designed to prejudice Jewish voters against him. The campaign has been particularly active in New York City with its heavy Jewish population. Attention has been called repeatedly to the number of Jews who at one time or another have been in the Roosevelt Administration or who have been and are his advisors. All this would be changed, the whisperers have charged, should Landon be elected. The basis, if any, for the charge that Landon is anti-Semitic is not clear.

More and more also is being made in the East, Landon advisors are told, of the story that Landon is a prohibitionist. The story is designed to inflame the more liberal East against him. Landon repeatedly has expressed himself on the subject, declaring that the liquor question is a matter for the States to determine and is not a Federal question with which the President need be concerned.

With the time approaching when the campaign must become really active, if it ever does, there is increasing evidence it will be fought out largely in the East and Middle West. Landon's recent successful trip into New England and New York, together with the results of the Maine election and the Michigan primaries, have worried the Democrats. Republican strategists believe. They are looking for reprisals.

On the other hand, considerable activity is being centered right here in Kansas. Consistently the story is being spread that Landon will not carry his own State. One report has reached here that tourists with Kansas licenses on their automobiles are systematically covering the country grasping every opportunity to spread the report.

The Republican high command and the organization here insist Landon not only will carry the State but that thre is a strong possibility all Kansas Representatives will be Republicans for the first time in many years. In spite of their predictions, however, they are really worried about the effect on the rest of the country of the report of their candidate's weakness at home.

It is almost as hard to judge sentiment in Topeka as it is in Washington. One hears only one side of the story. It is true, however, that very few Topekans turned out to hear their Governor address the Young Republicans last Friday. This was explained on the ground that Landon is no novelty to the home folks.

In a local motion-picture theater last night pictures of both Landon and Roosevelt were thrown on the screen. There was about an equal amount of applause for each.

In an effort to make good the prediction that Landon will fail here, the New Deal has been pouring increasingly large sums of money into Kansas. Landon supporters are convinced the New Deal is trying to "buy his own State out from under him." A report of John G. Stutz, executive director of the Kansas relief administration, shows that the Democratic Administration has been so generous in providing relef it has authorized quotas of WPA employment in various counties that are larger than would be required if all those eligible for public assistance were given jobs.

The difference between Eastern sentiment and that in the West was apparent among the Young Republicans who met here last week. The Eastern group was much more enthusiastic about the prospects of victory than those in the West. A delegate from Nevada said the story that Landon would not carry Kansas was so prevalent in his State that in Reno even money was being offered on Landon's chances in his home State and there were no takers.

The Kansas Governor remained at home today working on the speeches he is to make this week. He looks upon them as the most important in his campaign. He will put the finishing touches on them tomorrow, preparatory to leaving for Des Moines Tuesday for the first of his major talks on his forthcoming swing.

Army Transfers Moseley, Advocate Of CCC War Drills

Maj. Gen. Van Horn Moseley will take command of the Third Army headquarters at Atlanta, on October 1 when the headquarters is moved there from San Antonio, the War Department announced yesterday.

Moseley recently advocated militarizing the CCC, but Army officials here said his proposal had nothing to do with the change, and that it was merely routine following the retirement of Maj. Gen. Frank Parker from active service on September 30.

The command automatically is transferred to the headquarters of the senior officer for the various armies, it was explained.

The Third Army, a tactical command, is made up of the Fourth and Eighth Corps. As commander of the tactical unit, Moseley still will retain jurisdiction over CCC camps stationed in the Fourth Corps area of which he has been in command. He will not, however, be in charge of the Eighth Corps area CCC camps, the War Department added.

The Third Army includes troops in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado New Mexico and part of Wyoming.

Allen Will Speak On Landon Tonight

Former Gov. Henry J. Allen, of Kansas, will arrive in the Capital this afternoon to address a Republican rally tonight in the Willard Hotel.

The meeting, sponsored by the local Landon and Knox Campaign Club, will be one of the first political rallies held in Washington for several years, it is believed.

Allen, who is scheduled to speak at 8:45 p. m., will describe the personality, character and achievements of Gov. Alf. M. Landon. The Republican Presidential nominee and the former Governor of Kansas have been friends for 20 years. Landon served as personal secretary to Allen when he was Governor.

American Embassy To Close Tomorrow As Refugee Haven

By the United Press.

The United States Embassy in Madrid will be closed tomorrow as a place of refuge for Americans remaining in the revolt-torn Spanish capital, the State Department announced yesterday.

The department pointed out that those living in the embassy had been warned last week they would be required to leave soon and had been provided ample opportunity for evacuating the country.

Consul George M. Graves, of Bennington, Vt., has closed the United States Consulate at Malaga temporarily and evacuated the staff to Gibraltar aboard the destroyer Hatfield, it also was announced. The Hatfield also evacuated the Argentine consulate staff.

Fifty-one United States nationals from Madrid were evacuated aboard the U. S. S. Quincy from Alicante Saturday, the department was advised. A total of 328 has been evacuated since start of the Spanish revolution. The 142 Americans remaining in Madrid "do so on their own responsibility after repeated opportunities to leave," the department said.

Americans were offered a "haven of safety" in the Madrid embassy when danger was acute July 22, the announcement recalled, "until such time as arrangements could be made for their evacuation."

Should it again become dangerous for Americans to stay in their homes in Madrid, the department said "the embassy will again be reopened to them for a limited period until they can be evacuated from Spain."

Survey Group Suggests Step to Spur World Trade

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—A recommendation that creditor nations of the world take the lead in a general policy of "less restriction and more trade" to bring about economic expansion was made tonight in a report of the joint committee of the Carnegie Endowmen for International Peace and the International Chamber of Commerce.

The reporting group, composed of business leaders in the principal countries of the world, was headed by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and of the endowment, and Fentener Van Vlissingen, president of the International Chamber of Commerce, at the October meeting in Paris to which the recommendations will be submitted.

President Off For Hyde Park Fete to Mother

To Attend Birthday Celebration as First Lady's Condition Improves.

By the Associated Press.

With the condition of Mrs. Roosevelt, who has been ill with the grippe for several days, sufficiently improved to permit him to leave Washington, President Roosevelt arranged to depart last night for his Hyde Park, N. Y., home.

He expected to arrive there about breakfast time to join in observance of the eighty-third birthday of his mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt.

While the President's wife was described as "very much better" the White House said she would not acompany Mr. Roosevelt but would remain here for a time.

The President expected to remain in Hyde Park until he keeps a political speaking date at the New York State Democratic Convention at Syracuse September 29. It will be the first address which the White House has allowed to carry a definite political label and was expected to mark the start of Mr. Roosevelt's open participation in the campaign for his re-election.

The Chief Executive had planned to go to Hyde Park after speaking Friday at Harvard University's tercentennary celebration, but changed his plans suddenly and returned to the Capital when he learned that Mrs. Roosevelt still was running a temperature.

He is due back in Washington again September 30 for a conference, which he called Saturday, to study possibilities of setting up a pool of private and public power in the Southeastern States and eventually in other regions.

He then will leave for a mountain State forest festival at Elkins, W. Va., October 1 and another speech the night of October 1 in Pittsburgh. He will move on October 2 to dedicate a new hospital at Jersey City, N. J., and attend a world series baseball game in New York before going again to Hyde Park. Campaign plans for October have yet to be announced by the President.

Roosevelt Radical, Coughlin Declares

St. Paul, Sept. 20 (AP).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin said today he turned against the New Deal when he "saw there was little hope of trying to correct a man who saddled on his doorstep the crackpots which surround him."

Addressing a rally of the National Union for Social Justice at the Minnesota State Fair Grounds, he recalled his phrase of 1932, "Roosevelt or Ruin," adding: "I was sure of one or the other—and I got one."

"I would rather take my chances with Norman Thomas and his Socialists than with the Democratic Party today," he continued, "because Norman Thomas is not half so radical as is Mr. Roosevelt and the gang around him."

Mr. Roosevelt, he said, promised to "drive the money changers from the temple."

"So, the bankers were driven out of the temple and they landed in the White House. Your Government has now degenerated into a hock shop collector for the bankers."

The priest termed Gov. Landon of Kansas, Republican Presidential nominee, "honest and well-intentioned," adding that Landon, however, did not recognize the problem of distributing the wealth of the Nation.

"Mr. Landon cannot have my support," he said, "because he wants to go back to the Coolidge prosperity that begot depression."

Girl 12, Arrested As Purse Snatcher After Street Chase

A 12-year-old colored girl, masquerading as a boy, was arrested by police yesterday after she allegedly snatched the purse of Doris Faust, 12, of 1772 Columbia road northwest, who was on her way to church.

The colored girl, who was reported missing from her home September 16, admitted to police she had snatched two other pocketbooks from small girls. The other thefts are not on police records.

Detective R. F. McCarthy, of the Tenth Precinct, who questioned the child after her arrest by Policemen R. F. Goodwin and L. H. Legg, said she told him she had been living on a lot in the rear of Henderson's Castle, at Sixteenth street and Florida avenue northwest. She had snatched the pocketbooks so that she could buy food, she said.

In a report filed at the Tenth Precinct station, Doris said she was walking on Columbia road northwest, near Fifteenth street, when she was approached by a "boy." Her purse was grabbed from her arm by the "boy," who fled. A citizen, who saw the robbery, called to the fleeing figure and the purse was dropped. The police later caught the fugitive at Sixteenth and Euclid streets northwest, where it was found "he" was a girl.

Meanwhile, Myrtle Cronkhite, of 1801 Sixteenth street northwest, told police her pocketbook containing nearly $50 was snatched from her at Sixteenth and Caroline streets by a colored man, who escaped through the alley.

President Asks Crop Insuring, Land Use Study

agriculture as well as business in assuring farmers some income both in time of price collapse and in time of crop failure.

"I have been impressed by the work of the Department of Agriculture in developing actuarially sound methods for affording farmers the use of the insurance principle in protecting them against hazards which for centuries have handicapped their occupation. I am expecially interested in its studies of a plan providing for the payment of premiums and insurance in commodities. This should make it possible to base the premium rates on the production of the individual farms as shown by records of past production, a large number of which the AAA county committees already have on file. This method should avoid making farmers of one region pay for the risks of another region. By making this insurance available only to farmers co-operating in farm and soil conservation programs, the plan would be safeguarded from the price dangers which the Federal Farm Board operations invited in the years from 1929 to 1932. By using existing records of co-operating farmers and farm committeemen, it would appear that premiums based on risk experience could be as fairly assessed as with existing forms of private insurance.

"The expense in the past to Federal, State and local governments of burdens caused by drought shows it is time to begin using the economical principle of insurance to lessen the financial and human costs of drought in the future.

"There should be no question that the welfare of the entire Nation would be served by including as keystones of our agricultural policy crop insurance and storage of reserves along with conservation of soil and water, better land use and increased farm income.

"Crop insurance properly worked out should give adequate abundance to consumers even though there are several years of severe drought, while at the same time farmers would be protected from the low prices like those of 1932, which might result from several years of good weather."

In the letter to Cooke, on the appointment of the land-use-study committee, the President stressed that "We should face the fact that the climatic conditions make special safeguards absolutely necessary. * * * The report now called for is an amplification of the recommendations presented to me at Bismarck."

To serve on the Cooke committee, the President designated the following persons:

Prof. Harlan H. Barrows, member water resources committee, National Resources Committee, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. H. H. Bennett, chief Soil Conservation Service, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Dr. L. C. Gray, chief division of land economics, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Col. F. C. Harrington, assistant administrator, Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.; Col. Richard C. The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

Labor's Nonpartisan League made public yesterday a statement it said was from Judge E. R. Sloan, of Topeka, asserting that civil service in Gov. Alf. M. Landon's State of Kansas had been a "dead letter on the statute book" since 1921.

Sloan was described by the league as a former member of the Supreme Court of Kansas. In the statement, Sloan was quoted as saying:

"Gov. Landon has wholly ignored the law and there is not now a single civil service employe in any bureau or branch of the State government. There is no merit system and every job-holder and employe of the State owes his position to political service."

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Representative William Lemke (Republican), North Dakota, the Union Party Presidential candidate, asserted today that his Republican opponent, Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, had so far based his campaign on "noble-sounding statements" without advancing a plan to correct what Lemke termed "the present fumbling with recovery."

In a speech prepared for delivery, Lemke described a billboard poster of the Republicans which he said bore the inscription "stop fumbling with recovery," and then said:

"What plan do the Republicans propose? Have they advanced any sound and basic set of reasons why they will be more successful in solving the problem (of recovery) than the present Administration? * * * What magical plan does Mr. Landon propose?

"If he has a hatful of white rabbits that will actually solve our problems I think it is about time for him to show them to us."

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—The Progressive National Committee, headed by Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., Wisconsin, today opened headquarters for its campaign to unite progressive and liberal forces behind President Roosevelt.

"The vote gained by the Progressive National Committee for President Roosevelt ought to amount to 2,000,000, and that is a considerable estimate," said Maurice P. Davidson, New York, executive vice chairman of the committee.

Davidson declared he thought that speechmaking by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith would not add a "single vote" to the total for Gov. Landon.

The fifth chapter of the Fortune Quarterly Survey, released here yesterday, showed 59.2 per cent of the 4,500 men and women personally questioned were for the re-election of President Roosevelt. "Dank defeatism," according to the pollers, was expressed by the Republicans questioned. Sixty-nine and two-tenths per cent of the latter believed the President will win the campaign, the survey found. The release said:

"Landon expectation is greatest among the people who like Roosevelt least. But there is very little of it at that."

The Fortune survey consists entirely of personal interviews by the cross-section method, in which men and women from every strata of life are asked uniform questions.

U. S. War Debt Refunding Plan Hinted in Italy

Discussion Here This Fall Held Likely; New Loan May Be Sought.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Sept. 20.—Italy today hinted to a desire for war-debts refunding and new loans from the United States.

The new ambassador to Washington, Fulvio Sulvich, probably will discuss Italian financial relations with the United States shortly after his arrival this fall, informed sources said.

The discussions would be based on two co-ordinated points:

1. Resettlement or refunding on a much lower scale of Italy's $1,014,065,749.13 war debt.

2. The probability of floating a new loan.

Resumption of war-debt payments to the United States on the present basis, reliable informants asserted, assuredly would not be considered.

Premier Benito Mussolini repeatedly declared opposition to the war debts as they stand now, and Italy defaulted her June payment.

One official today said Italy is anxious to have full financial and commercial relations with the United States, and some sources gave credence to reports Ambassador Suvich would seek to resume some form of war-debt payment to further this desire.

The Government announced recently that foreign currency Treasury bonds would be issued for sale in other nations, although the Johnson act of Congress would bar a defaulting war-debt nation from obtaining new loans in the United States.

Financial observers here, however, said the bonds could be placed indirectly through individual sales, particularly to Italo-Americans without violating the Johnson act.

Soviet Air Hero Maps Coast Line

Moscow, Sept. 20 (AP).—Russia's aviator hero, V. S. Molokoff, was acclaimed today on his return from a two-month aerial exploration of the Arctic across the northern coast of Siberia.

Molokoff, on a flight of more than 15,625 miles, was the first to trace the whole breadth of the tortuous Soviet coastline.

He started from Krasnoyoarsk, southern supply base for Arctic aviators, and flew his hydroplane all the way to Wrangel Island, skirting the Arctic Ocean virtually from Barents Sea to the Bering Sea. He touched at Yakutsk, Kamchatka, Wellen and Wrangle Island on the outward flight.

He returned by easy stages to Archangel and Moscow.

The flight accentuated the careful survey work the Soviet has undertaken in the Arctic in preparation for regular Polar air service to the Far East and the United States.

Drought Curbs To Be Discussed At Parley Here

Controlling of the Rivulet Headwaters to Be Topic Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

A conference on up-stream engineering—described as the science of controlling "little waters"—will be opened here tomorrow for a two-day session led by Morris L. Cooke.

Cooke was chairman of the long-range drought committee named by the President, and the conference—said to be the first of its kind ever to be held—was viewed by its originators as of value in finding means for combatting future droughts.

Engineers, soil men, climatologists and other specialists in conservation will attend the sessions, at which 400 persons from 40 States are expected.

Cooke contends that while engineers have perfected the science of impounding large waters, only slight scientific study has been recorded on conservation and control of rivulet headwaters.

Robert A. Millikan, president of the California Institute of Technology; Secretary Wallace, Frederick N. Folker, secretary of the American Engineering Council; Isiah Bowman, president of Johns Hopkins, and Frederick A. Delano, of the national resources committee, are among experts to attend the discussions.

Forty-two private organizations and 38 private agencies are co-operating in the conference, with exhibits by the United States Forest Service, Weather Bureau, Soil Conservation Service, Reclamation Service, National Park Service, Biological Survey, Geological Survey, Bureau of Fisheries, National Resources Committee, Public Works Administration, Tennessee Valley Authority and Rural Electrical Administration.

Plans for a conference of young men Thursday with Representative Maury Maverick, of Texas, as principal speaker, also were announced.

At this meeting, delegates plan "the foundation for a continuing program of erosion control extending over more than one generation," with 12 speakers from 4-H clubs, Future Farmers of America, the Junior Chamber of Commerce and the National Grange.

FCC Is Urged To Back Bar on Browder's Talk

Civic Group Says WCAE Correct in Refusal to Permit Broadcast.

By the Associated Press.

A contention that the Federal Communications Commission would be "derelict" in its "duty to support the laws and Constitution" if it sought to require Station WCAE of Pittsburgh to broadcast speeches by Earl Browder, Communist Presidential candidate, was made public yesterday by Archibald E. Stevenson, general counsel of the National Civic Federation.

The station canceled a National Broadcasting Company network speech of Browder's August 12, reporting to the Communications Commission that it substituted another program it believed to be more in the public interest. The commission on September 10 had called upon WCAE to explain its failure to carry the August 12 speech.

Stevenson, addressing himself to Chairman Anning S. Prall, of the commission, argued that the Communist Party was an organization designed to overthrow the Government by force, and therefore could legally be denied time on the air.

"Under these circumstances," he wrote, "it is my opinion that any broadcasting station aware of the facts which permits Earl Browder to use its facilities to forward the conspiracy becomes itself an accessory and party to the conspiracy. For these reasons, Station WCAE was correct in its refusal to grant Earl Browder the use of its facilities."

Nazis Touring Italy.

Rome, Sept. 20 (AP).—Five hundred Nazi youths from Germany reached here today on a tour of Italy. They were welcomed by an Italian Balilla honor guard. It was believed they would be received by Premier Mussolini.

Keep God in Life Of U. S., Al Smith Tells Holy Name

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Asserting the one reason for the convention of Holy Name societies was "to keep God in our national life," former Gov. Alfred E. Smith today said, "I don't see what we're going to do without Him."

Speaking to 110,000 Catholics from all parts of the country in the closing session of the convention at Randall's Island Stadium, Smith added, "I don't see any solution of our problems.

"Look at Russia, Spain and Mexico, where civilization has been set at naught—because without God there can be no civilization. What have we? We have the cave man's law—the law of the sharpest tooth, the law of the angry growl, and the law of the greedy maw."

At the last formal meeting, of the convention, 5,000 delegates passed a resolution urging the discharge from "institutions of education * * * any teacher or instructor" advocating communism.

Two Shot, One Fatally By Mysterious Prowler

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Martin Damamskis, 42, was shot and killed early today as he went to the garage behind his home to see if the family car was there.

In the same neighborhood—Less than a mile away and within an hour's time—Louis Rolanec, 50, was shot and wounded seriously by one of two men who asked him for a match in front of his home. Police said there was no apparent motive in either case. Each man was a respected citizen, they said.

This year's President's Cup Regatta, one of the notable sailing events in the country, will open Thursday night, with a crowd of about 350 yachtsmen expected to be on hand for the program.

Legion Unveils Gardens Pillar At Cleveland

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 20.—America's legions of the World War, storming Cleveland with bands playing and colors flying, re-enlisted today in the cause of world peace.

Dedication of Peace Gardens, whose soil was brought from sacred shrines of foreign countries and the 48 States, opened the formal activities of the American Legion's eighteenth national convention, business sessions of which will open tomorrow.

The legion, in an impressive ceremony led by National Commander Ray Murphy, unveiled in the unique gardens a memorial pillar bearing a plaque reading:

"These gardens, planned by men who know the horrors of war, are dedicated to the brotherhood of man and peace throughout the world."

Dedication of the gardens followed the release of Commander Murphy's annual report in which he said, "Whether our country shall be spared participation in another great international conflagration may well depend upon our courage as legionnaires to stand up and demand that our Government now take steps which may save us, without the loss of honor—a sacrifice we are unwilling to make at any cost."

The Peace Gardens, located in Rockefeller Park, form the spearhead of Cleveland's $1,500,000 Cultural Gardens and consist of two divisions—the Avenue of Nations and the Avenue of States—covering an area of approximately two acres each.

Potomac River Oyster Yield Is Fairly Heavy

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 20.—The Potomac River oyster-tonging season, which arrived Tuesday, is well under way, according to reports from the Northern Neck of Virginia.

Although tonging is lawful in the Potomac River beginning Tuesday under an agreement with the State of Maryland, it is not legal in the Rappahannock and other Virginia waters until October 1.

Near Colonial Beach during the opening days as many as 150 boats were out, with "buy" boats from Maryland, Washington, Baltimore and Norfolk close at hand and offering 35 cents a bushel. Such offers were declined by tongers, it was reported, and by nightfall of the opening day prices had risen to from 40 to 50 cents a bushel, according to the grade of oysters.

The condition of oysters in the Colonial Beach section is reported the best in years and prediction of high prices before the season is over are being freely made.

From Colonial Beach down to the mouth of the Potomac the crop is in splendid condition and catches were reported this week by each boat of from 15 to 40 bushels on the opening day. These catches were made with the usual hand (shaft) tongs. Oystermen predict an abundance of the bivalves in the Rappahannock and York rivers also.

The Rappahannock oyster, considered among the finest because of its flavor, is sold largely in Baltimore and other Chesapeake Bay cities and towns. Fredericksburg, at the head of the Rappahannock, gets but few oysters from the river because of poor transportation from the lower section some 90 miles down, where the oysters are tonged.

First Voters' League Will Resume Tour

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 20.—A tour of western Maryland counties, started Friday by Scott Beck, jr., Chestertown, Md. chairman of the Roosevelt First Voters League of Maryland, will be resumed Tuesday, when the sound-truck of the Roosevelt caravan will visit Garrett County that day and on Wednesday will tour Allegany County.

Beck spent Friday in Carroll County and yesterday in Hagerstown and Washington County towns. Hagerstown's chapter of the First Voters League has 178 charter members.

Fred Wiseman to Run For Luke Mayoralty

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luke, Md., Sept. 20.—Fred Wiseman was nominated as a candidate for mayor of Luke at the primary convention held at the Devon Club in Luke. Wiseman received 70 votes and his only opponent, O. D. Williams, the present mayor, received 33 votes.

Four candidates for the positions of councilmen also were named. They are A. J. Cave, James Donahue, Edward Duckworth and Alton Fortney. The election will be held October 12. A mayor and four councilmen will be chosen.

Hunters Fined.

Kingwood, W. Va., Sept. 20.—Cecil Shay, of Newburg, and Orville Shay, of Fairmont, paid fines here for hunting on Sunday. When arrested they were in the woods with their coon hounds and a gun, officers said, but as they had made no kills they could not be fined for killing game out of season.

Residents Warned As Colorado Rises

Brownwood, Tex., Sept. 20 (AP).—Two radio-equipped Coast Guard planes flew low over the flood-threatened Colorado River Valley today warning residents to seek safety as the rampaging river headed toward more populous regions to the south.

The river, its path strewn with destruction, was rising rapidly at Chadwick, south of here, at mid-afternoon. The stage there was 52 feet, within a few feet of any recorded high.

W. A. Smith, publisher of the San Saba News, estimated between 200 and 300 people were homeless in the flood area.

With two deaths and untold property damage already charged to the turbulent floodwaters, Coast Guardsmen established a base of operations at Austin, the State capital, for rescue work.

The capital, in the path of the swollen river, braced for the flood crest, but Frank Haynes, weather observer, predicted it would not reach there before tomorrow.

Plane Service To Orient Is Set To Open Oct. 21

Plans Also Announced for New Transatlantic Dirigible Route.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—The Pan American Airways system tonight announced its transpacific air route to the Orient would be opened to commercial passengers October 21.

The first westbound trip to Manila, via Honolulu and Guam, will start with the regular weekly departure on that date from San Francisco. Eastbound service will start from Manila on October 29.

Officials said passenger fares would be announced within the next ten days.

The scheduling of passenger service over America's first ocean air route followed approval of the project by Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper.

Secretary Roper's approval was based on the reports of Federal engineering and flight officials who recently completed an inspection trip over the 8,200-mile route. Since the preliminary service was started between California and the Philippines last November 22, only mail and cargo have been carried.

Lakehurst, N. J., Sept. 20 (AP).—Andreas F. Bronsing, president of the Dutch airship syndicate, today announced he and a group of associates had taken steps to form a company in the Netherlands to operate a transatlantic dirigible passenger and commercial service.

Bronsing, who arrived here today on the German Zeppelin Hindenberg, said he already was negotiating for construction of the company's first ship. He indicated it would be built by the Goodyear Zeppelin Corporation, of Akron, Ohio.

Bronsing said the decision of the syndicate had been the result of a six-year study of the feasibility of operating dirigibles for passenger and commercial purposes.

Bronsing said he, Dr. Hugo Eckener, head of the Zeppelin Co., and "American interests" had held numerous conferences to discuss plans for reciprocal agreements under which a German, Holland and an American company would be permitted to use the same terminals in all three countries.

He spoke of Dr. Eckener's forthcoming visit to Lakehurst to open negotiations for a permanent North American terminus, and indicated this might be part of a plan which grew out of the Holland-German-American conferences.

Coughlin to Post Fund for Recount

By the United Press.

Detroit, Sept. 20.—Louis B. Ward, Washington representative of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, tonight said he would post 17,335 with the secretary of State this week, covering the cost of a recount of the Democratic Senatorial primary vote in Michigan.

Ward was defeated last week by Representative Prentiss M. Brown, New Deal candidate, by nearly 3,000 votes in unofficial returns.

He immediately asked Gov. Frank Fitzgerald to protect the ballots while he raised cash for the recount.

"I had three offers of funds," Ward said. "I accepted Father Coughlin's offer, made in behalf of the National Union for Social Justice."

Blum, Eden Confer.

Paris, Sept. 20 (AP).Premier Leon Blum and Britain's Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden discussed foreign policy here today and were believed to have reached definite agreement on some subjects to be presented at the League of Nations Assembly opening tomorrow.

THE QUEST FOR QUALITY

PRICE is an important consideration to all of us but Woodward & Lothrop has always clung steadfastly to the idea that price alone is not enough . . . the intrinsic value must be there . . . and quality determines value.

That is why Woodward & Lothrop has always sought and bought quality—and value. This quest for quality has led to many strange bazaars in foreign lands but it is worth it.

Woodward & Lothrop knows that it is often difficult for the casual eye to readily discriminate between "good" and "mediocre" . . . that in the matter of rugs, for instance, a genuinely fine article may look much the same as a flashy imitation. But not to the professional buyer, for in reality there is all the difference in the world between the two.

To make sure that every customer will be protected from inferior grades, Woodward & Lothrop makes it a fixed policy to buy quality always.

The quest actually starts (for the makers) high in the mountains of China, Iceland, Australia and Scotland. Here grow the finest sheep in the world, and the wool most sought after by makers of fine rugs and carpets. Under the rigorous rule of Mother Nature the wool grows long, and thick and strong . . . to fulfill some day its destiny for mankind.

Not an "armchair operator," the Woodward & Lothrop buyer frequently inspects the factories where the rugs and carpets are made so that he constantly keeps abreast of the product produced and the type material that is being used. Long fibered, kinky, wiry and tough wools are combined to produce woolen and worsted yarns which are full-bodied and resilient—thus the rugs possess a durability that cannot be gained by haphazard selection.

When judging a carpet or rug the buyer looks at the back, for that tells the story of quality. He counts the number of tufts to the inch . . . then looks at the edges and measures the height of the pile. Closely woven rugs take more time to make . . . use more wool, but they look better and wear longer. High-pile rugs are softer to the tread . . . also use more wool, look better and wear longer.

Color and design are the next consideration and it is here that the knowledge of the buyer stands him in good stead. Poor colors will not do and are quickly rejected by the color-trained eye of the buyer. He makes sure that specially selected white wools are dipped in the purest of dyes. His knowledge of style trends enables him to select new patterns and colors to meet the latest ideas of interior decoration.

RUGS AND CARPETS, FIFTH FLOOR

Quality

QUALITY is never an accident; it is always the result of high intention, sincere effort, intelligent direction, and skillful execution; it represents the wise choice of many alternatives, the cumulative experience of many masters of craftsmanship, and it also marks the quest of an ideal, after necessity has been satisfied and usefulness achieved.

Old Dominion Gray Veterans Gather Today

Ranks Thinned, but Larger Attendance Expected Than at Roanoke.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 20.—A mere remnant of Confederacy's few remaining veterans in Virginia will begin assembling here tomorrow for the annual reunion of veterans and sons which will open Tuesday.

Just what number of Virginia survivors of the battles fought from 1861 to 1865 will attend the two-day exercises is problematical. There are no more than 25 chapters in existence in the State today. Reports received from organizations of veterans by Gen L. Wesley Cox, commander of the John Bowie Strange Camp, of Charlottesville, led to the belief that the attendance will be much larger than at the last reunion, held in Roanoke. Veterans will be here from the camps in Norfolk, Richmond, Petersburg, Roanoke, Richmond and Harrisonburg.

The reports reveal some interesting facts. In many instances camps have gone out of existence, so great has been the death toll. Here in Charlottesville the John Bowie Strange Camp has only a half dozen survivors, whose ages average more than 91. The eldest is William C. Webb, who will be 99 October 12. The next oldest is W. W. Norvell, who is 94. Another, C. A. Carpenter, yesterday passed his ninety-first birthday. He was a member of Company A, Twenty-third Virginia Regiment, Louisa Volunteers. He lives with his daughter, Mrs. E. S. Beasley, in this city.

Swell Attendance.

Sons of Veterans and official ladies will swell the attendance at the reunion. They will come from all sections of the State. The junior organization is anxious to carry on as long as there is a single veteran left. Decision as to continuing the reunion rests with the veterans themselves.

Most of the officers of the Virginia Division, Sons of Confederate Veterans, have notified Mark V. Pence, commander of the R. T. W. Duke Camp, this city, that they expect to be present. They are, N. Charter Burruss, of Norfolk, commander; Col. George C. Cabell, of Norfolk, adjutant and chief-of-staff; Lieut. Gov. James H. Price, of Richmond, judge advocate; Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, of Richmond, historian, and author of the book, "Robert E. Lee," and other studies in Confederate military history; Dr. Hugh H. Trout, of Roanoke, surgeon; Frank C. Switzer, of Harrisonburg, commissary; J. Edward Beale, of Bealeton, quartermaster; the Rev. W. Foy Mason, D. D., of Charlottesville, chaplain; Dr. W. H. T. Squires, of Norfolk, publicity director; J. Z. Holladay, of Charlottesville, color sergeant, and F. B. Fitzpatrick, of East Radford, assistant historian.

Brigade Commanders.

Brigade commanders of the Sons who will come are Brodie S. Herndon, of Portsmouth; Joseph E. LaPrade, of Richmond; J. Barily Andrews, of Roanoke, and Mark V. Pence, of Charlottesville.

All business meetings of the Veterans and Sons will be held at the Monticello Hotel. The joint meeting of the two bodies Tuesday night will take pace at the Jefferson Theater. The chief speaker at the reunion will be Col. George C. Cabell, of Norfolk. This address will be delivered Tuesday night, preceding the presentation of "official ladies" by Charles T. Norman, of Richmond, past commander in chief, Sons of Confederate Veterans.

Man Is Beaten In Mysterious Attack in Auto

Is Assaulted Upon Return to Car in Woodmont; Condition Serious.

Attacked and beaten by two unidentified colored men while sitting in his car on Potomac avenue in Woodmont, Md., Chester Wayne Carney, 36, of 1615 B street southeast, was in a serious condition in Georgetown Hospital yesterday.

According to Bethesda police who sent a lookout for a car bearing District tags, Carney had driven some friends to their home shortly after 8 a. m. When he returned to the car his assailants drove up and assaulted him.

Carney was found unconscious nearly an hour later by neighbors. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital, where physicians said he has a possible fractured skull. His condition was described as serious.

Police could not explain the mysterious attack. They said the colored men evidently were familiar with Carney's movements and had waited for him. Robbery was not the motive, police said. Carney's wallet, containing several bills, was found in his pocket.

U. S. Starts Job Of Stabilizing D. C. Milk Sale

Opponents to Marketing Pact Plan to Fight Issue in Court.

With promises to the consumer that he won't know the difference insofar as the price of his bottled milk is concerned, the Federal Government this morning took over control of the District's milk supply.

The bitterly debated marketing agreement, signed last week by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, went into effect at midnight, placing into AAA hands the job of stabilizing and improving milk selling conditions.

The control plan, under the direction of its newly appointed director, Richard D. Aplin, starts to operate with its opponents far from ready to give up their fight.

Writ Probable.

While leaders of the opposition revealed no definite plans last night, a court injunction to halt temporarily the functioning of the agreement was believed probable. Unable to dissuade the Agricultural Adjustment Administration from its plans for Federal milk control here in recent hearings, those opposed to it expect to resort to legal means to accomplish their purpose.

Chief among the opponents is the Fairfax Farms Dairy, large independent company, which through its attorneys, Sefton Darr and Louis Obergh, threatens the injunction suit.

The Washington Consumers Council, which fought the agreement on grounds that it might bring about a retail price rise, will await action taken by the two attorneys for the dairy, it was learned last night. The council, while ready to participate in any proceedings to stay the agreement, has not planned to take initiative.

200 in Opposition.

Also on the opposition side are about 200 independent producers, who frown upon milk price regulation because they fear it will prevent them from underselling rates stipulated in the agreement.

These farmers represent a small minority of the 1,300 producers who supply Washington its milk. Most of these dairy farmers belong to the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, which initiated the request for the agreement and has steadfastly supported it.

The Federal hurricane warning system said: "Tropical disturbance of slight to moderate but probably slowly increasing intensity was central at 8 p. m. at approximately latitude 25 degrees north, longitude 65 degrees west moving northwestward about 10 miles an hour."

Units to Study Ways of Paring U. S. Agencies

Senator Byrd Sets Initial Session Wednesday at Capitol.

By the Associated Press.

The first meeting of the Senate Committee on Governmental Reorganization and that named by President Roosevelt primarily to study administrative management will be held at the Capitol Wednesday.

In calling the meeting, Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, who sponsored the investigation and heads the Senate Committee, said yesterday co-operation between the two groups would be explored. Members of the President's committee also are advisors in the Senate inquiry.

Information for the broader inquiry, which envisions a long-time process of simplification and cutting down of bureaus in the Government, has been accumulating since before Congress adjourned. This, said Byrd, "and any other assistance within the power of our committee will be gladly given in the effort of the President to abolish useless departments and agencies and to decrease the cost of government."

Louis Brownlow, a member of the Presidential group, said its study had been directed principally toward expediting the flow of executive orders and similar information through the affected branches. Management problems will remain, he said, regardless of eliminations or consolidations of bureaus.

Associated with him on the Byrd committee staff are Luther Gulick, director of the Institute of Public Administration, New York; William T. Gardiner, former Governor of Maine; President H. W. Dodds, of Princeton University, and John D. Clark, of the University of Nebraska.

"You bet Washington can be proud of its Transportation!"

A LOT of things have happened to the transit system of America's capital city in the past three busy years.

New cars have been added—millions of dollars' worth of track changes have been made—and more new buses have been put into service here in Washington than in any other city of comparable size in the land.

During this time the number of passengers carried has stepped up 88 per cent—while the total revenue from fares paid has gained only 44 per cent—which means that people are enjoying this better transportation at a lower cost than ever.

Take a fresh and honest look about you and you'll see evidence of this improvement on every hand.

Witness those handsome new streamlined cars—riding on rubber-cushioned springs and shock absorbers—ventilated with a thousand cubic feet of fresh air a minute—and powered to sprint from a standing start to 40 miles an hour in ten seconds flat.

Witness the fleet of 257 additional new buses, many of them serving neighborhoods which had no low-cost transportation before.

Witness the average rate of fare—less than 6c for the city as a whole, with more than six people out of ten riding for just about 4c a trip.

And witness the job the transit system does—in bringing 80,000 people safely and punctually to work during the rush period every working day of the year.

It takes hard work and hard cash to deliver such a service—but the Capital Transit Company promised to deliver, and the record shows that it is making good.

TRANSIT FACTS AT A GLANCE

IN the past twelve months, the Transit Company has operated its cars and buses more than 29,000,000 miles and has carried more than 220,000,000 passengers.

Because 80,000 people swarm to the heart of the city every weekday morning, it takes more than twice as many street cars and more than three times as many buses to handle the rush period as it takes throughout the day.

Washington is different from other cities in that its business offices and workshops are situated largely in one central area. This means that the working population rides in one direction at a time, and that street cars and buses must do half their rush-period traveling almost empty.

As many as 85,000 people buy the Weekly Pass each week. Thousands of these Passholders ride at less than 4c a ride.

Outside of the Government, the Transit Company has the largest number of employees (more than 3800 in July) and the largest monthly payroll (more than $528,000 in July) in the District.

The Transit Company is owned by 2,101 individual stockholders of whom more than 74% live in the District.

257 new buses and 150 miles of new bus routes have been added in the past three years.

A Challenge To Free Inquiry.

Harvard's seal bears for a motto the single word, "Veritas." Appropriately, then, the keynote of the university's tercentenary celebration, now concluding, has been "truth." In the interest of truth, the world's outstanding scholars were invited to Cambridge to participate in a microscopic study of man; to promote the spread of truth, the achievements of Harvard as a seat of learning were extolled to the corners of the earth; to safeguard truth, fervid pleas were addressed to the Nation at large to cherish the ideals of scholastic freedom, fast fading in some countries.

An unlooked-for supplement to this program developed last week in the form of a pamphlet assailing the judgment of A. Lawrence Lowell, president emeritus of Harvard, who headed a committee which reviewed the Sacco-Vanzetti case nine years ago. Its pages are signed by a group of Harvard alumni, largely men well known for their liberal views. This origin of the pamphlet is fortunate, for an attack sponsored by persons other than Harvard men, at the very moment of the anniversary ceremonies, would have been woefully distasteful. What is not so fortunate are the words reported to have been used by the former Governor of Massachusetts who was in office during the Sacco-Vanzetti trial. According to press dispatches, on learning of the pamphlet he characterized its sponsors as so many "damn fools."

That comment rudely jars the whole tercentenary picture, the more so because of the emphasis which has been placed on the virtues of truth and, inferentially, its handmaiden, tolerance. Few more stirring challenges to free inquiry, at least in its legal and social aspects, have been brought forward in recent days than the Sacco-Vanzetti case. The Lowell committee was assigned the function of analyzing the Sacco-Vanzetti case from a factual and unprejudiced viewpoint. But many felt that the truth was never fully vindicated, that free inquiry was subordinated to preconceived ideas.

Under these circumstances the challenge of Harvard men whose attention is centered on the negative side of the record deserves a better designation than the work of "damn fools," especially when it is projected into an atmosphere ringing with disavowals of prejudice.

The Bankers Convention.

Several turbulent sessions have been held by the American Bankers Association since the advent of the New Deal. At times the bankers have manifested positive hostility toward the Administration, but that attitude has been frequently modified by genuine attempts at co-operation. When the A.B.A. meets in San Francisco today, the New Deal is expected to be much less of an issue than it has been in the past. In spite of the fact that this is an election year, discussion is likely to turn into more normal channels.

In its 1932 and 1933 conventions the association was particularly concerned over the proposals to guarantee bank deposits. A resolution passed in Los Angeles during the Hoover-Roosevelt campaign declared that the guaranty of bank deposits by the Government would be unsound in principle and unworkable in practice. The latter part of the criticism has not been borne out by the experience of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. But the soundness of the principle is still far from being proved. Certainly no insurance scheme can be a reasonable substitute for modernization of our banking structure.

Last year the convention at New Orleans seemed to be chiefly interested in the growing Federal debt and in the expansion of Government control over industrial, commercial and financial enterprises. The bankers elected as their second vice president an outstanding critic of the New Deal who a few days previously had urged them to boycott Government bonds to force a balancing of the budget. But obviously they were merely giving expression to pent up feelings. There has been nothing in their attitude since the convention remotely to suggest a boycott. On the contrary, leading banks, having little choice in the matter, have added to their holdings of Government bonds at prices higher than those prevailing a year ago.

Although the bankers are still vitally interested in a reduction of Federal expenditures, repetition of the boycott idea would not likely meet with favorable response this year. Serious talk of a boycott might disturb the price of Government bonds, which is precisely what the bankers, as large holders of those securities, are seeking to avoid. Rather there is a tendency to regard current prices of Government bonds as normal, and therefore to continue indefinitely the policy of cheap money, as being in harmony with the banks' invested position.

Some aspects of the controversy between the bankers and the New Deal remain to be ironed out. But indications that the A.B.A. will devote most of its time in San Francisco to strictly banking problems are in themselves welcome evidence of better times.

On The Altar At Geneva.

The League has not yet recovered from the blow it received when, at the instance of Great Britain and France, it agreed to call off sanctions that had been imposed on Italy for having embarked on war against Ethiopia in violation of the Covenant. It is now plagued by the aftermath of that problem. For when it agreed to abandon sanctions the League did not, at the same time, agree to recognize Italy's conquest of the East African kingdom. In the eyes of League members, therefore, Ethiopia must continue to be regarded as a sovereign state—whatever the reality of the situation in East Africa may now be—and therefore entitled to representation in the Assembly by an official delegation.

The great powers represented at Geneva, however, are far from eager to be reminded by the presence of such a delegation that they failed, and the League failed, to stop Italy. In particular they are opposed to doing anything which might further offend Italy. That country has made it plain to the governments at London and Paris and to the League's secretary general who recently visited Rome, that it will refuse to take part in League activities if an Ethiopian delegation is permitted to sit in the Assembly.

This stand has placed the League on the horns of a dilemma. To exclude the Ethiopian delegation would be tantamount to recognizing the destruction of Ethiopian sovereignty by Italy. Such action would be difficult to reconcile with the Covenant. It would also open up that other troublesome question of Japan's conquest of Manchuria which the League has also refused to recognize. But if the opposite course should be followed, if the Ethiopian delegation should be seated, that action would be interpreted by Italy as a rebuff and might even lead Mussolini to resign from the League. This Great Britain and France fear. They appear ready, at almost any cost, to grant Italy's wishes.

It now remains to be seen whether they will have their way. The smaller nations are openly suspicious of any development that could be interpreted as doing violence to the spirit as well as the letter of the Covenant. But short of an actual revolt by those powers it is not unlikely that Great Britain and France will induce the Assembly to sacrifice principle to expediency. They do not want to drive Italy further than it has already gone into the arms of Hitler.

Once again, apparently, Ethiopia is to be the sacrificial lamb on the altar of European peace. If so, the flames from that pyre will leave neither Great Britain nor France nor the League unsinged.

Johnny Fischer's Victory.

An unpremeditated stymie was the turning point in the battle for the national amateur golf championship which sends a Scotch whisky salesman back to Glasgow with only a consolation trophy for his pains. The laurels go to a gangling Cincinnati law student.

Not only did the stymie give Johnny Fischer a half on the thirty-fourth hole when Jack McLean was a few feet from an almost certain win, but it proved to be the inspiration that stirred Fischer into shooting three consecutive birdies to clinch the title. Thus Harold Hinton remains the first and only man from the land where golf was invented to win the American amateur—and that was far back in 1911 when most native golfers were handicapped by an awe for the burly tweed coats with which Britishers then braced their swings.

The stymie alone, of course, did not lose the match for McLean. His putting, too, counted heavily against him. In the morning round he had two three-put greens and still turned in a card of 75 on a par 73 course. In the afternoon, the greens proved even more of a bane for him, exacting an extra stroke three times within five holes. And Fischer was no one to overlook this weakness.

Notwithstanding that his own game, notably in his approach shots, was unusually ragged, the Cincinnati lad played on doggedly and in the end proved the truth of the adage that no golf match is won until the last putt has been sunk. In so doing, he has once more proved the fascination of golf in general. Conversely, many an average (or worse) golfer will find consolation in the knowledge that even a national amateur finalist can and, in McLean's case, did cancel out any number of spectacular shots by muffing two or three picayune putts. Golf is still golf, even when champions play it.

Blasting Cap Dangers.

In the letter columns today we print a communication from the Institute of Makers of Explosives. It is especially interesting because it indicates how certain branches of industry are looking beyond their ledger books in an effort to order their businesses to the best advantage of society as a whole.

Automobile makers, with their safety campaigns, have shown a similar commendable interest. Cynics may suggest that it is only good business thus to make products more acceptable to the public. While this may hold true in the case of automobiles, it is less applicable to explosives. The larger the amounts of dynamite exploded, whether accidentally or not, the better manufacturers' profits would be.

Blasting caps have always been a source for horrible accidents, the more so because of their perversity in falling into the hands of children. Every effort is made to keep them safely locked up, but careless workmen occasionally leave them lying about on construction jobs to which children are often attracted during off hours. Sometimes the caps are hammered or picked at, sometimes they are thrown into bonfires. In any event, the results are always tragic.

Under the direction of the Institute of Makers of Explosives and with some participation by the Federal Government, a campaign is now in progress to impress children and adults alike with the dangers of these harmless-looking little copper cylinders. However, the persons best able to drive home the warnings to children—parents—are difficult to reach. With their co-operation, particularly in reporting to police authorities any blasting caps improperly guarded, accidents are certain to diminish appreciably.

Hitler's Amnesty.

For three and a half years Carl von Ossietzsky has been a prisoner of the Nazis. Editor of Die Weltbuehne, one of the most brilliant and hard-hitting of German periodicals in the days of the Weimar republic, an ardent advocate of peace and equally ardent foe of Fascism, Ossietzsky was arrested shortly after Hitler came into power.

He was never brought to trial. Indeed no charges were ever placed against him. It was enough that he had opposed the Nazis. That has been the fate of thousands of others in the Third Reich. But many of them are unknown while Ossietzsky had an international reputation. In Switzerland and Norway he was nominated for the Nobel Peace prize, a nomination that was seconded by a great number of European and American intellectuals.

Three and a half years of imprisonment of the Nazi variety is enough to break the spirit of all but the strongest. More than one original foe of the regime has been "educated" to the proper degree of submissiveness. Ossietzsky's spirit was never broken. Though ill of an incurable disease he never changed his views. And the only concession made by the Nazis to world opinion regarding his case was to transfer him from a concentration camp to a prison hospital. But now he is to be released.

Unfortunately it is almost too late to rejoice. What might otherwise have been an act of justice appears now as cynical opportunism. Ossietzsky's impending release, it is reported, is planned because the Nazi authorities believe he is going to die and prefer not to have him die on their hands.

There are many other Ossietzskys in Germany's numerous concentration camps and prisons. And it is not entirely clear that they will be included among the 500,000 prisoners who are to be the beneficiaries of Hitler's current amnesty.

Among these are numbered petty criminals and those whose "excessive zeal for the National Socialist cause" got them into trouble with the authorities. Critics of the regime are also listed among those scheduled for liberation. But on whether this includes critics who refuse to recant the dispatches are silent.

Toward Co-operation.

It is not yet possible to say that the President has inaugurated a new power policy by his invitation to certain private operators to sit down at the conference table with Government experts for the purpose of working out a "pooling" agreement. Many questions will remain unanswered until the conference has been held. But the attitude in which the Administration is now approaching this problem is wholly commendable.

The desire of the Administration to make electricity available to "the greatest number of our people at the lowest cost and, as far as possible, without injury to existing actual investment" must be shared by a large majority of the people. A serious controversy over power policies has arisen largely because of the manner in which the President set out to achieve this objective. His "yardstick" theory has never been economically justified. On the contrary, it has led to the impression that the Administration was determined to use public funds to drive down the charges of private generating companies without regard for fair competition or the protection of legitimate investments.

In announcing the conference on "pooling" of power resources the President did not mention "yardstick" retail rates on which so much emphasis has been placed in the past. He spoke of the possibility of reducing wholesale rates through the joint use of transmission lines and generating facilities. This would obviously be done through co-operation between public and private power systems. Such an arrangement should work to the advantage of every one. It remains to be seen, of course, whether such agreements can be worked out satisfactorily. The President has suggested only that "we should thoroughly explore the possibilities." But that is a significant indication of a broader view on the power question. If the private operators are now willing to meet the Administration half way, the unfortunate feud of the last few years may be terminated.

No doubt the World Power Conference held in Washington recently has been a factor in shaping this co-operative plan. The value of "pooling" power resources was certainly emphasized. And the boost which some advocates of public operation of power resources expected for their viewpoint was not forthcoming.

Margaret Mitchell's Grant.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of September 11, Mary Logan Tucker wrote you concerning a statement made by Margaret Mitchell in her book, "Gone With the Wind." She said in part: "I... was made not only indignant but disappointed to find Margaret Mitchell had joined the group of Southern women writers who can not resist trying to defame the reputation of Gen. Grant. On page 279 . . . she states: 'Gen. Grant was a butcher who did not care how many men he slaughtered.' No true soldier ever 'slaughtered' men of his own command or even those of his enemy."

Gen. Grant got his title of "butcher" after his bloody campaign of The Wilderness, May 3, 1864. In that battle he lost 18,000 men, while Gen. Lee lost about 11,500. (See Grant's Campaign of the Wilderness, Encyclopaedia Britannica, 14 ed., vol. 23, pp. 597-8.)

His frightful sacrifice of life is one of the things historians attribute to Grant.

"The Federal leader used his men with a merciless energy that has few, if any, parallels in modern history. At Cold Harbor 6,000 men fell in one useless assault lasting an hour, and after two months the Union armies . . . had lost not fewer than 72,000 men . . . When Grant was in personal control, the merciless policy of attrition wore down Lee's army until a mere remnant was left for the final surrender." (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 14 ed., vol. 10, pp. 639-40.)

Miss Mitchell's book is not primarily of the War Between the States, but as an artist she has shown the effect of those terrible days on the characters of her story. She knows that "tragic era" of our country quite thoroughly and historically she has held to the ideal of accuracy.

CECILE WILLINK.
Washington, Sept. 17.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is to be regretted that the diatribe against Margaret Mitchell was given so much prominence in your edition of September 11. It may not be permitted to go unchallenged.

It is stated in the article referred to that Margaret Mitchell in "Gone With the Wind" calls Grant a butcher.

Margaret Mitchell does not call Grant a butcher, a baker, or a candlestick maker. She expresses no opinion of Grant, favorable or unfavorable.

As a guess, I would judge if she did express her opinion it would be that Grant proved himself a gentleman at Appomattox and a hero in his dying years.

Margaret Mitchell has written a novel of over 1,000 pages aglow with the fires of life and death at a period of unrestrained passion and prejudice, and, with singular restraint, she has never thrust her personality upon the reader.

What, then, is the alleged basis of this charge? "Gone With the Wind" opens a chapter on page 278 with a picture of the physical condition of the South in the first months of 1864. With the last paragraph of this page it begins to portray the mental attitude of the South or rather of the "folks back home," about whom the entire story revolves. The quotation by Mary Logan Tucker is taken from this delineation of the sentiments and prejudices of a sadly harassed people at a crucial time and put into the mouth of Margaret Mitchell.

It would occupy too much space to quote the entire context, but to anyone interested in the matter even a casual perusal of the context will render obvious the fact that Margaret Mitchell expresses no opinion as to Gen. Grant.

In view of the prominence that was given the absolutely unjustified attack made upon Margaret Mitchell, fairness and decency require that this reply be given the same prominence.

Another View Of Insurance Security.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A communication appearing in your columns of September 17 signed "Insurance" and purporting to show that this form of saving has been jeopardized by the Roosevelt Administration would seem to fall a trifle short of logic.

"Insurance" points out that policyholders's money is invested in Government bonds, railroad securities, farm mortgages, utility company stocks, etc. and further asserts that "with all of these interests threatened and their earning capacity diminished by the Roosevelt policies and the credit of the Government jeopardized, it inevitably follows that the holders of life insurance policies are gravely menaced with the loss of their insurance."

Substituting facts for hallucinations, let us begin with March 4, 1933, when these fearsome policies commenced taking form. Government bonds were still negotiable but with the general shortage of money due to bank withdrawals, the actual hiding of millions of dollars of currency and the unwillingness of owners of still other millions to spend even for the necessities of life there was little sale for Government bonds or any other form of security. Railroad stocks had reached their all-time low; dividends had ceased entirely or had been reduced to a mere fraction of their customary size; farm mortgages, ordinarily regarded as one of the safest forms of investment, had failed to pay interest under the blight of 5-cent cotton, 30-cent wheat and $3 hogs. With a few notable exceptions utility companies had passed their dividends and their stocks were an unwanted commodity. It was on such shifting sands that the stability of life insurance rested on March 4, 1933.

Economic restoration began with the swift sure moves of the Roosevelt Administration and the transformation effected in three years' time is without parallel in human history. These "menacing" policies which frighten "Insurance" apparently beyond hope of comfort, have in three short years so increased the confidence of investors in the United States Government that a recent issue of the Treasury bearing an exceptionally low interest rate was vastly oversubscribed in 24 hours' time.

In three short years "Insurance" has lived to see the value of important railroad stocks advance five and six hundred per cent. What a rare form of "jeopardy" to accomplish such an upturn in values. In three short years the farms of our country have been rescued from devastating prices so that in place of 5-cent cotton we now have 12-cent cotton, 30-cent wheat has become $1.20 wheat, 20-cent corn has become $1.20 corn, with similar improvement in the price of all important farm commodities, and whereas the value of a farm mortgage in 1932 was problematic it is now re-established on a pre-depression basis.

Farmers are once more paying interest on borrowed capital, repairing their fences, painting their barns and sending their children to college. One has but to consider the statistics of our current steel output, automobile production, farm income, bank clearings, sales of catalogue houses, power consumption, etc., to realize that the corner has been definitely turned and that life insurance, in company with savings of every kind, is more secure now than at any time during those gloomy and uncertain days which preceded the Roosevelt Administration.

CONVALESCENT.
Washington, Sept. 18.

Safety Progress.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I offer my personal and sincere thanks for your continued editorial interest in the new war on traffic accidents that is being waged so intensively throughout the country at the present time?

The "awareness" of the problem that the American press has helped create during the past year, through understanding presentation of the technical and educational phases in the editorial columns and the recording of plain, unvarnished facts on the news pages, has brought the public to a receptive mood for the ministrations of local, State and national safety agencies.

Thirty States now have permanent State-wide traffic safety organizations. Some of these are safety councils, organized by private citizens; others are departments in State highway or motor vehicle divisions of the State government. Literally hundreds of our cities now have functioning safety organizations.

Let me emphasize that the press is playing an important part in the actual reduction in traffic deaths during the first seven months of the present year. Total deaths for that period were 2 per cent lower than for the same seven months of 1935, in spite of a 9 per cent increase in gas consumption. New York cut deaths 12 per cent and New Jersey 13 per cent—demonstrating that traffic can be controlled in even the most populous, congested areas.

Grade and high schools by the dozens have set up regular credit courses in safety and schools by the hundreds now offer automobile driver training to students. Harvard, Purdue and Northwestern Universities are leaders in a group of institutions of higher learning that have set up traffic safety departments.

Blasting Cap Dangers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to a clipping just received, we note that there has been an accident in Cherrydale in which a young boy has had his left hand torn off as a result of the explosion of a blasting cap with which he had been playing.

Efforts are being made by the Institute of Makers of Explosives, Government agencies, safety associations, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, school authorities, and other important Nation-wide institutions, to call attention wherever possible to the dangers of children playing with blasting caps, in the hope that these accidents may cease. In view of the fact that one of these accidents has happened in your vicinity, would it be possible for you to help in this work by calling attention to the dangers of children playing with blasting caps, and to ask all of those who have to use explosives to make certain that the caps are carefully put away out of reach of children?

F. J. BYRNE,
Publicity Committee, Institute of Makers of Explosives.
New York City, Sept. 17.

"Soul Conservation."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the "March of Time" this week Gerald K. Smith, in one of his speeches, stated that "he got his inspiration from the skies." This brought to mind an old story which might be also interpreted for Mr. Smith.

The story goes—a farmhand went to the elder of his district asking to be ordained into the ministry, giving his reason that he had "been called." The elder asked him how he knew this, and in what manner the call had come to him, to which the farmhand replied that one evening he had seen the letters "G. P." in the sky, and he knew at once it meant, "Go Preach." The elder shook his head sadly and said, "Friend, those letters didn't mean 'Go Preach'—they meant 'Go Plough!'" GRACE M. RUPPERT.

The Post Impressionist

A Sacrifice To Aesculapius.

Post Office, Monday.

SPEAKING of doctors—which, believe it or not, one of the District's doctors was doing yesterday—there is nothing in Washington which has changed so much, since the Capital's founding, as the Capital's physicians. The fields have become a town, the town a city; the city is becoming a thing of beauty—if not always a joy—but the Washington doctor has developed still further.

Perhaps it was because he had a longer way to go!

Of course, the period between the end of the Seventeen Hundreds and the middle of the Eighteens wasn't brilliant for medicine anywhere. In Europe (see Dr. H. B. Shafer's "American Medical Profession," Columbia University Press) doctoring still retained traces of medievalism; in this country, it was traveling a rough road "from the medical arts to the medical sciences." That road had no turning until, in the decade between 1840 and 1850, there came the discovery of the contagious nature of puerperal fever and the introduction of ether as an anesthetic.

Said that Washington doctor on whom we drape the present column:

"Before 1763, the colonies' only medical education consisted of 'isolated tutorial courses in anatomy and surgery.' Then Dr. William Shippen, jr.—along with Dr. John Morgan, just returned from post-graduate work at his University of Edinburgh—started the Pennsylvania Medical School. But, right after the Revolution, its charter was revoked by the infant State's legislature. Thorough medical training had to wait for the school's incorporation with the University of Pennsylvania in 1791."

And you should remember that the seat of the Federal Government wasn't transferred to Washington until 1800.

It wasn't until 1813 that the Capital's doctors thought of forming a united front. Then, having met in a memorial service for Dr. Benjamin Rush, physician and "Signer," they sketched a medical society. It took form in 1817, at Tennison's Hotel—"to fight pretenders" — with Dr. Charles Worthington as its head.

Two years went by before its first charter was secured. Signed by Henry Clay, as Speaker of the House; by Daniel D. Tomkins as President of the Senate, it conferred upon the organization "the right to regulate the practice of medicine" within the District.

The local practitioners' first fee-code seems to date from 1833. Read it—and envy your ancestors:

"Visits and prescription, $1. Consultation-visit, $5—or, if beyond the city limits, $8—with subsequent visits $2. Venesection, the extraction of a tooth, dressing a wound, $1. Visits for every mile beyond the center of the city, $2 additional to the ordinary fee." . . .

Even in those days, there were "zones!" . . .

"Night attendance, from $3 to $10. Midwifery, in the day, $12, and in the night $15. Capital operations, $40 to $100. Fractures or luxations, tapping for dropsy, $10. Minor amputations, $5. Stiching recent wounds and opening abscesses, $3, with $2 for subsequent dressings. Vaccination, $3."

The code, Dr. Shafer assures you, "was accompanied by a statement to the effect that rates might be reduced for the poor, any payment being acceptable, according to the difficulties attending the treatment."

How did the doctors live on such a schedule?

In the detail of professional profit, other parts of the country may have differed little from this part:

"It runs me almost crazy," wrote Dr. R. D. Arnold, of Savannah, in 1839, "to think that, with hundreds upon hundreds due me professionally, I find the greatest difficulty in raising a simple $50. I hope as I grow old, I will grow wiser in money matters and not be constantly in want of a $20 bill."

At that time, Dr. Amariah Brigham was in annual receipt of some $2,500 from his Hartford, Conn., practice. Dr. Robert Frary's day-book shows yearly receipts of something over $2,000. The period's champion appears to have been that Bostonian George Shattuck, famous in medicine as a physician, famous in education as the first patron of St. Paul's School, at Concord, N. H.: in the 12 months following the panic of 1837, his income was $9,666.

But, precisely as to the Washington physician's earning during that epoch, your columnist has no records. He'll try to find some—and compare them with medical incomes current. His opportunity may arrive tomorrow, for then, and for a brief period following, he himself will be contributing to the general treasury of the profession—under a physician's care.

Until he comes out of it, however—silence.

Au revoir!

—Reginald Wright Kauffman.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Two Fascists.

IT IS HARD to believe that our two leading Fascists, Father Coughlin and Dr. Townsend, fully realize what they are doing, for they both seem to be honestly stirred by pity for the poor and love of country. Yet both, in their angry zeal to push through their theories, have adopted methods which would smash the American democracy to a gory ruin. It takes a good leader to conduct a popular movement within the liberal bounds of democratic procedure, because that system permits freedom of opposition and calls for superior character and ability. A dictator needs nothing but sufficient brute force to crush the opposition, suppressing those he can't persuade, intimidating those who don't exactly agree but shrink from fighting for their liberties.

It was so in Italy and Germany, two old nations whose people, for all their claims to greatness among the civilized races, when the test came showed themselves unable to govern themselves by popular methods.

For all the braggart arrogance of Fascist and Nazi, for all the constant childish clamor about their racial superiority, they are ashamed in their hearts because they know that when they had a chance to govern themselves by the authority of elected public leaders they failed miserably and surrendered their responsibility to bosses who would kill them if they didn't behave.

• • • •

THEY WANTED to govern themselves and they envied the Americans, but they just didn't have what it takes, and the dictators moved in when the people flopped. Their savage pride in present conditions is a defense mechanism, like the defiant abandon of the hardened street walker who had a chance to be a decent woman but couldn't make the grade and affects to sneer at the wife with babies and a home. Though they may sweep on to conquest over weaker peoples, it will always humiliate them in their souls to realize they were not sufficiently civilized to adjust their problems by reason rather than the rifle.

Both Father Coughlin and Dr. Townsend have repeatedly shown a contempt for popular rule, which is directly traceable to their incompetence as democratic leaders. They are both only a couple of years out of total obscurity, and both have been annoyed to discover that real leadership calls for tact as well as zeal. So both have resorted to dictatorial methods, and Father Coughlin to public insult and abuse of those who exercise their American right to disagree.

• • • •

THE PRIEST, like Hitler and Mussolini, calls himself the leader of his organization, and, like them, he insists upon sole, final authority in all decisions affecting the politics of a group which is said to number millions, and probably does. He has no party congress or conference, no advisers or consultants. What he says goes, though he sometimes hedges on what he says. His followers have no recourse but to accept his decision in all matters and give him full obedience. That technique is in the spirit of Hitler and Mussolini.

Dr. Townsend, of course, has no talent for democratic politics. He undertook to run a convention of his party in an orderly manner, but soon demonstrated that he hand't the faintest appreciation of the American system of government when he read a man out of the party by fiat because the man presumed to make a speech defending the President of the United States against the insults of Father Coughlin.

• • • •

DR. TOWNSEND said that Gomer Smith, of Oklahoma, should have delivered this speech in private to the executives of the party if he had to make it at all, not to the old men and women of the convention who had listened to the vituperation of the President, including one impassioned threat to "drive that cripple out of the White House."

The old men and women of the convention might hear the abuse but not the defense, and Dr. Townsend was furious because they had been exposed to the corrupt influence of a minority report. The old doctor simply cannot meet the conditions of democracy, and so, like Father Coughlin, he resorts to main strength.

Democracy is the hard way, but the results are worth the extra effort.

These two men suggest a couple of tyro golfers who thought the game was easy because the champions made it work so smoothly. But when they discovered that the game was beyond their ability they got furious at the ball, not themselves, and assumed the right to throw it out of the sand-traps by hand.

But in the words of a popular English song of last winter, you "cawn't do that there 'ere."

"Ode To Autumn"

By William Lyon Phelps.

Weather-Poem.

The autumnal equinox is the astronomical beginning of autumn; although when I was a boy at school in Connecticut we always called the first day of September the beginning of fall.

As to whether there is anything melancholy about autumn, that depends entirely on two things—on which country you live in, and on your individual temperament.

If you live in Europe, the beginning of autumn is melancholy, because bad weather becomes chronic; it has been well said that in Europe the year has eight months of winter, and four months of bad weather. Furthermore, England, France, Germany, not to mention the Scandinavian countries, are so much farther north than the U. S. A. that the autumnal days are much shorter than with us. The weather in England, France, Germany is usually dark and overcast, and at best pale; rain becomes a habit.

• • • •

In the U. S. A., on the other hand, autumn is magnificent. It is a daily tonic. All blue and gold, with sparkling air, and the pungent smell of burning leaves.

Individually, we see the difference in the personal attitude toward autumn in two American poets—Bryant and Riley. The former said of autumn, "The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year," whereas the same season was described by Riley as "the air's so appetizin'" and "a feller is a-feelin' at his best."

To those who love reading, there is something cheerful about the long autumn evenings; the open fire and the lamplight give a pleasant glow. One understands the lines of Browning in his poem called "By the Fireside:"

"How well I know what I mean to do
When the long, dark autumn-evening comes!"

He will sit by the open fire, with a book in his hand.

Paradoxically enough, Keats, a sick man, wrote the following letter to his brother, George, one day in September. He was in southern England and the weather happened to be beautiful.

Here is his letter, as given by Amy Lowell in her "Life of Keats:"

"How beautiful the season is now! How fine the air! A temperate sharpness about it. . . . I never liked stubble-field so much as now—Aye better than the chilly green of spring. Somehow, a stubble-field looks warm—in the same way that some pictures look warm."

We should all rejoice that the weather at that moment happened to be good; because it inspired Keats to write the greatest of all weather-poems—his "Ode to Autumn."

A Problem State

New Jersey, "Commuters' Commonwealth," Divides Easily Between New York And Pennsylvania Where Its Interests Lie.

By Eugene Pharo.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Trenton.

NEW JERSEY also is a State, controlling 16 electoral votes. It is even one of the thirteen original colonies; yet it is not likely to be chosen by the Liberty League as an apposite illustration of the sanctity of States' rights.

Earlier, an agricultural paradise, and known as the Garden State, the province, now heavily industrial, has gained of recent decades a unique appelation. "New Jersey," some one said, backing his statement with a ton or more of time-tables and traffic schedules, is "the crossroads of commerce." It is also the greatest railroad terminal on this earth. Nearly everyone in the United States, at least, has at some time passed across her territory; usually in order to get to some other place.

The State being a sort of universal junction point related eventually to every other spot in the country, if not in the world, it is too apparent that her problems are far from being merely local ones, or that their solution could be achieved by relying exclusively on State agencies.

These facts, and others, occurred to mind recently when a studious Marylander posed the question whether, in the matter of States' rights, or even State identity, New Jersey could defend her existence. If so, what was the inmost essence of her entity? What integrating factors make New Jersey naturally a State?

Geography and Interests Fail to Justify Sovereignty.

THE MORE you concentrate upon New Jersey in order to find something to identify it, as Virginia is identified and unified by its characteristic culture; or as Maryland, by its location and history; is made an individual sovereignty, the less able you become to see in its geography, history, interests, or activities anything, with the exception of river boundaries, to unite it within itself, or to set off its parts as in any way different from the States that border them. Even its coast resorts fail to answer the purpose, for they are scarcely populated at all in the comparison with their patronage by visting "foreigners"—that is, by those from without the State.

Not that anyone is ever called a foreigner in New Jersey. On the contrary, it is in fact and fancy the home of anyone from anywhere, who can be lured within its borders. It might be called, as accurately as anything else, the Commuters' Commonwealth. In nothing except as a place through which you pass, or which you visit for brief periods of time, or where you sleep or play a little golf, does it seem to have any significant existence. Even those who are born and stay there have their eyes turned outward to other places; never steadily and tranquilly upon the place in which they live. A conscientious search among some of the most inveterate and honorable denizens of the State has not revealed one who has any recognizable pride in being a "Jerseyman," although faint stirrings of affection can be detected for the particular towns or cities in which they have spent their lives.

There is, on the contrary, an attraction among the citizens toward the neighboring matropolises of New York and Philadelphia, and an internal stress that, if once recognized and acted upon decisively, would split the State in two, even if it did not cause either half to adhere to the States in which New York City and Philadelphia are found. So it is not surprising, when delving into the history of New Jersey, to discover that it has in the remote past been considered as part of, and under the same governance as these adjoining commonwealths.

Duke of York Split State Off as Mere Whim.

IT WAS a mere whim of the Duke of York that separated New Jersey from New York in early colonial days. This whim led him to bestow the territory, against the advice of his counsellors, upon Lord John Berkeley and Sir George Carteret. And William Penn once owned, together with some other Quakers, all the part that would now fit nicely into the orbit of Philadelphia, having acquired it following the death of Carteret.

Royal grants, land purchases, and a rather hit or miss destiny based on the individual interests of the various proprietors determined the original separateness of New Jersey. Squabbles led to its return as a whole to the Crown in 1702 as a royal colony. When the Revolution occured, it went right along as a colony, and no one ever thought, apparently, to suggest a more rational allocation of its parts when the United States was set up.

This allocation was almost as obvious in 1776 as it is now. Namely, the addition of a large part of northern and central New Jersey to the State of New York, so that the Hudson River should fall completely within that jurisdiction; and a similar apportionment of southern New Jersey, together with two or three of the northern counties bordering the Delaware River, so that that river and its port might be entirely within the domain of Pennsylvania. This is suggested on the assumption of the greater mass attracting the lesser; otherwise it would be suggested that Pennsylvania be added to southern New Jersey, and New York to northern New Jersey.

These changes would upset scarcely anything but existing political and legal machinery, and a few nicely adjusted industrial lobbies and spheres of influence. They would have no perceptible effect on the national picture, for New Jersey fluctuates rather evenly between the two major parties. A re-apportionment of its electoral votes (12 to New York, and 4 to Pennsylvania) on the basis of population shifts, would not have any important effect on national State relationships.

Northern and Southern Sections Scarcely Speak.

AT PRESENT the preponderance of population in northern New Jersey, and the efficient political machines, centering in Hudson and Essex counties, that determine the political destinies of the State, cause south Jersey to be almost entirely neglected. Residents of the northern part do not, in the main, even recognize that the southern part exists, except when they feel a yen to visit Atlantic City ("The Playground of the World"), to view beauty queens from California and other States, or when they use its highways to take them on their way to Washington or Florida.

All this would be changed were the southerners to become part of the mass of population around Philadelphia. There the unity of interests revolving about that port, and the custom spent upon the south Jersey shore resorts by the Pennsylvanians, would make south Jersey voters part of a large Pennsylvania bloc that would measurably influence any events in which they should choose to take part.

In the northern part of the State voters would, in conjunction with New Yorkers, have as much scope for their talents as they now have but would be taught something more of the manners and efficiency that grow out of tangible competition in organizing and planning.

Legal and tax matters would be straightened out and simplified in both ends of the present State, which are populated very heavily by commuters who work and earn in Philadelphia and New York. And it would not be necessary for so many motorists to buy two sets of license plates, one for each State. This last detail is significant of the larger interest that would be served, and of which the most striking recent example was the long litigation over whether the late Dr. Dorrance, of the Campbell Soup Co. was a resident of New Jersey or Pennsylvania. He had residences in both States, and made his money in New Jersey. When he died both States claimed him, because of the huge inheritance taxes due from his many millions, and both States collected.

The effect of the suggested change of State allegiance upon the development of the Hudson and Delaware Rivers, and their estuaries, can hardly be imagined. With each State solely responsible for developing and beautifying both banks of its particular river, and no conflict of authority over the building of bridges, the allocation of water rights, and the preservation of the waters themselves, such as grows up between States, a beautiful efficiency of action could be achieved that would make State's rights mean a great deal. This responsibility would even extend to the ocean, for it is unthinkable that New York would ever dump her garbage in New York Bay so that it drifted onto the bathing beaches of Monmouth County, as it did a year or two ago, if those beaches were part of its own sovereignty.

It may occur to the thoughtful reader that extension of this reasoning might result in the future absorption of the State of Delaware by Pennsylvania, in order further to unify care of the Delaware River, and that a progression over towards Chesapeake Bay would be a further natural result.

That prospect, which is not really very alarming, could be handled when we came to it. If Pennsylvania should show up on the Chesapeake, it would be historically appropriate. William Penn spent a lot of time, and engaged in considerable controversy with Lord Baltimore, in order to achieve, if he could, that specific result.

Off the Record.

An Editorial Review

Throughout The Nation.

LAST WEEK'S primaries, in the opinion of the Republican Kansas City Times, indicated a turn of the tide against the Administration. Its reasoning ran:

No longer can the Administration forces assume that they will be swept back to easy victory. The people are becoming aroused to the dangers of loose spending, debt, burdensome taxation and other policies of the New Deal. They are finding out the real nature of that regime and they are expressing themselves. * * * Michigan provided the decisive test of the New Deal itself. Senator Couzens had been a popular figure in Michigan, where his integrity and previous political independence had been widely respected. But when Senator Couzens, a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, announced that if returned to Washington he would support Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal, the Republican voters of Michigan cast their ballots for Couzen's opponent, former Gov. Brucker, by a majority of approximately 100,000. The total Republican vote in the State was substantially in excess of the Democratic, which augurs ill for the New Deal in Michigan in November, regardless of the future course of Couzens.

• • • •

CONTINUING on the same note, the St. Louis Star-Times, a Democratic newspaper, commented:

The Michigan primary showed a far heavier Republican than Democratic vote, totals for nearly the entire State running 500,000 to 380,000. But in view of Senator Couzens' stand for Roosevelt, the comparative figures may not mean much. The New Deal Democrats were worried, in advance, for fear that so many of their voters would enter the Republican primary to aid Couzens that they might fail to nominate Frank Murphy as Democratic candidate for Governor. They put him over, however, by a good margain. The vote plainly shows that the Republican Party in Michigan is conservative, but its strength is uncertain. It would take a mind reader to determine whether the Couzens vote in the primary is to be classed as Republican or Democratic in the November election.

• • • •

VIEWING the results of another primary, in New Hampshire, where former Senator George Moses failed in his comeback attempt, the Memphis Commercial Appeal, a Democratic paper, said:

To some folks it will seem that Senator Moses wisecracked his way out of the Senate, for his wit was caustic and his tongue sharp. His famous reference to a group of Middle and far West Progressives as "sons of the wild jackass" was his most notable crack, but not his only one by any manner of means. They did him no good among the mush-mouthed politicians. There were times when he let his love of a sharp rejoinder outweigh his discretion. In the truer sense, though, Senator Moses' experience proves that forthright men are not wanted in political organizations. He had a tendency to say what he thought and let feelings fall where they might. Former Gov. Al Smith of New York is another illustration, especially after he branched out from strictly State politics. Senator Moses was sharp and Gov. Smith was blunt and both are on the political shelf.

• • • •

The result in Wisconsin indicates that the La Follettes are as strongly entrenched as ever. The Governor has not been as ardent in his praise of New Deal policies as his brother, Senator Robert M. La Follette. Having served two terms, he seeks to succeed himself. The always independent Wisconsin electorate may choose a La Follette Governor, and at the same time give a plurality for the Republican Presidential candidate. The upset of Senator Couzens in Michigan is the most striking development of the primaries to date. That result should cheer Republicans who had feared that the Couzens indorsement of the President would hurt the party. The Republican votes rolled up in Michigan and in Massachusetts as well augur well for Gov. Alf M. Landon's success in those States next November.

The Once Over

Come you bad men of the Bad Lands,
Come you hombres raw and tough!
Cut some notches in your pencils,
Shoot some tall and fancy stuff!
Crowd the muse into a corner,
Let her know that you're the boss—
Train your weapons full upon her
As you bellow "Come Across!"

II.

On your pinto up Parnassus
Gallop, barking your commands;
You can make the gods of poesy
Come and eat out of your hands.
With a fountain pen two-barrelled
You can make your verses scan;
Let your fame ring out through Tombstone
As a deadly six-poem man!

III.

Round up Tennyson and Byron,
Draw a bead on Masefield, too!
Get the drop on Wild Bill Shakespeare
Make 'em show respect for you!
Chase 'em into camp arunnin',
Back from Boot Hill call the hearse . . .
There is terror in the Bad Lands—
Tombstone's gone from bad to verse.

IV.

If the inspiration fails you
Draw your pen and it will come;
With a wild and woolly "Yipee!"
Show the muse you're not a bum.
When a lilting line eludes you
To your saddle quickly climb;
This your motto: "Tombstone's bad men
Never fail to get their rhyme!"

V.

Let the barboy know you're lyric,
Order up a roundelay!
Treat the boys to couplets merry,
And with ballads wild and gay!
Shoot the mirror full of quatrains,
Blaze away with sonnets new!
You will never have to settle—
Give the house an I-Ode-U!

VI.

All those muses' feet are tender;
Make 'em, at your orders, dance!
Pump your six-gun al labout 'em
As you make 'em step and prance!
With your inkpots at your saddle
Shoot the works and wreck the place!
Here is hoping when the smoke clears

By Felix Bruner.

St. Louis is being shaken by the revelation of election frauds that are staggering in their magnitude. A grand jury is in session, charged with investigating the frauds. The city election board has resigned and a new one has been appointed. Unless the political bosses work rapidly and effectively the Missouri State penitentiary will have several new residents before many months have passed.

The story begins with a Federal boondoggle that rivals in magnitude the Passamaquoddy power project and the Florida ship canal, but for which there is even less excuse. It is a boondoggle surrounded with such a stench of corruption as no American city has been forced to breathe for many years.

The purpose of the boondoggle, frankly stated by its promoters, is to shake down the Federal Treasury for at least $22,500,000, and, if possible many millions more. The project, which sounds innocent enough, is to erect a memorial to that former patron saint of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson. There already is a large and elaborate Jefferson memorial in St. Louis—there is none, by the way, in Washington—but the existence of one memorial did not deter the promoters in proposing another.

The election frauds occurred a year ago when the question whether St. Louis should spend $7,500,000 of its own money, in addition to $22,500,000 of Federal money for the memorial. The announced result of the referendum was decidedly in favor of spending the money. The question has, after a year, been raised as to whther the voters actually did decide to spend it. The question was raised in a series of copyrighted news stories in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Some of the facts used here are drawn from that source with permission of the Post-Dispatch editors, but that newspaper is not responsible for any of the conclusions in these articles.

For a generation St. Louis, like many other cities, has been discussing plans for beautifying its water front. The part of the St. Louis water front which the beautifiers have picked for their operations unfortunately is a busy, thriving manufacturing, wholesale and shipping center. It is built up solidly with substantial structures. It is in no sense a slum area. Few persons make their homes there. Result: beautification would be expensive beyond all reason. Several plans were suggested but all were abandoned. The city simply couldn't foot the bill.

Then along came the New Deal. Word came from Washington that the Government was looking for places to spend money. Here was the opportunity. Plans for beautifying the water front were pulled from pigeonholes, elaborated and designated a Thomas Jefferson memorial. It was proposed that the memorial should cover 37 city blocks, blocks now filled with factory and store buildings from two to ten stories in height.

On this site were to be erected auditoriums, lecture halls, and museums, and there was to be provided a very considerable area, mostly underground, for the parking of automobiles. It would be a most desirable development; nobody would dispute that. It would be a development of which any city could be proud, especially if the Government paid for most of it. The promoters sent out letters in which they frankly said that somebody was going to get all that Federal money and it might as well be St. Louis.

Trips were made to Washington and the impression was brought back that President Roosevelt, Secretary Ickes and everybody else heartily approved the plan. Since that time there have been denials that unqualified approval had been given. A group of citizens immediately opposed the proposition. They argued that nearly every cent of the proposed $30,000,000 to be spent would be needed to acquire the necessary real estate and to wreck the buildings.

A city ordinance providing a $7,500,000 bond issue was drawn and a campaign was immediately under way. It was stated repeatedly in advertisements in the newspapers, on billboards and elsewhere that ten days after the bond issue was passed work would begin. The issue was passed a year ago and no work has yet begun. Since revelation of the frauds surrounding the bond referendum it is doubtful if it ever will. The advertisements said that 5,000 men would be put to work. Incidentally, it is estimated that 5,000 persons are now employed in the manufacturing and mercantile businesses in the area.

The bond issue was passed, or at least on the face of the announced vote it received the required two-thirds majority. The promoters hurried to Washington. They still remembered the statement of Harry Hopkins in a St. Louis speech that the memorial was a "damn fine project."

But there seemed to be some misunderstanding. Hopkins said his office had nothing to do with it. Ickes said he couldn't go ahead without approval of President Roosevelt. The promoters claimed they had received the impression that President Roosevelt was willing to approve the expenditure of $22,500,000 but that there was a legal hitch. They went to Attorney General Cummings and asked about the hitch. He said the appropriation could not be approved because all of the money wouldn't be spent during the existence of the relief act.

The promoters rushed back to the White House and finally succeeded in getting an executive order allotting $6,750,000 to the National Park Service to start the work. The idea was exactly like that behind the partial allotments for Passamaquoddy and for the Florida Ship Canal. The amount was similar. It was obviously not nearly enough to complete the project and there was no indication of where the money would come from to finish it. Maybe some day Congress, which never had been asked to approve the expenditure in the first place, could be prevailed upon to make an appropriation. The only difference between the operation of the Jefferson Memorial project and those of Quoddy and in Florida is that little money has been spent. The Jefferson project has been delayed by litigation.

The next article will give the details of the President's executive order and further history of the memorial project scheme.

France Warned Internal Split Imperils Peace

Blum Charges Employers Refuse to Compromise; Cabinet Aids Talk.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Sept. 20.—France was warned today to settle its labor and political squabble to solidify its strength against threatening war clouds in Europe.

"International peace demands first that we have peace among Frenchmen," Edouard Daladier, minister of national defense, counselled.

To Rush 40-Hour Week.

Pleading for unity among the Parties supporting the Popular Front, Blum promised to rush application of the 40-hour week on public works and said he planned to ask Parliament, when it reconvenes next month, for such new legislation as farm insurance and a form of unemployment insurance.

Daladier, Minister of Justice Marc Rucart, other cabinet members and government supporters, stumped the nation in a series of Sunday political addresses aimed at convincing factions that clashes between labor and employers, and between right and left political wings are endangering French security.

Strikes Spreading.

Government conciliation, meanwhile, negotiated strikers' demands in scattered regions where a widening wave of "sit-down" strikes had spread.

Settlement of an occupation strike in the textile industry in the Vosges district was obstructed by workers' refusals to evacuate the mills pending negotiations. Mill owers at Epinal said most of the plants were occupied by 30,000 workers on strike for wage increases and collective bargaining, despite their previous agreement to withdraw.

Other sections were beset with labor troubles including the capital, where dairy workers were on strike in the nearby Marne department, and Tours, where striking building workers paraded the streets singing the Communist anthem, the Internationale.

Racial Equality Urged by Thomas

St. Louis, Sept. 20 (AP).—In an appeal for colored votes, Norman Thomas, Socialist Presidential candidate, pledged his party in a speech prepared for delivery here today "to fight against discrimination wherever it raises its ugly head in the labor union or in the State."

Thomas, attacking the Communist Party for proposing "self-determination in the black belt," called the proposal "bad Americanism, bad socialism and bad sense." He said the colored race "wants freedom of opportunity, not segregation."

The Socialist candidate advocated "anti-peonage laws and a Federal anti-lynching law with teeth in it."

"We are the only nation which ever freed a race from slavery without giving it so much as an inch of ground to call its own," he said. "Whites through generations of slavery and after slavery, preached racial purity in the name of white supremacy, but forced upon the Negro the blending of blood which has made the Afro-American biologically the heir of two races, not one.

"Whipping and murder, originally used to keep the Negro in his place, are now used against the white sharecropper," Thomas said, citing what he called "victims of Florida floggings" and "the sadism of Arkansas planters."

Black Legion Lawyers To Ask Acquittal Today

Detroit, Sept. 20 (AP).—Circuit Judge Joseph A. Moynihan will hear arguments tomorrow on a defense motion for a directed verdict acquitting 9 of the 12 members of the Black Legion on trial for kidnaping and fatally shooting Charles A. Poole the night of May 12.

Bernard W. Cruse, defense attorney, made the motion late yesterday after the prosecution rested. He contended the State had submitted no testimony that the nine men agreed to be parties to the killing, that they took part in any conspiracy, or that they had any intent to commit murder.

Party Given By Siamese Envoy, Wife

Washington's Diplomatic, Official Sets Honor Youthful King.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Members of Washington's diplomatic and official set gathered yesterday afternoon at the Siamese Legation as guests of the Minister and Mme. Rajmaitri, who entertained with a reception in honor of the birthday anniversary of the young ruler of their country, His Majesty King Ananda Mahidol.

The occasion especially was enjoyable as it was one of the first of the fall season where friends who have been on vacation have had opportunity to meet again.

Large bouquets of gladioli and dahlias were used for decoration through the rooms. On a table at the foot of the stairway leading to the drawing room where the Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri received was a spray of red gladioli, matching the red of the carpet, and in the rooms upstairs they were of salmon color. There were also bouquets of great rose-colored dahlias as well as of pink roses. Mme. Rajamaitri is fond of flowers and particularly of the varieties in this country.

Guests who arrived at the affair early had opportunity to see the tiny daughter of the host and hostess, Ramadi, a charmingly poised little person of just 2 years, who was brought in for a few minutes by her nurse before bedtime. She wore a dainty white frock, which accentuated the black of her hair and eyes, and she was the center of attention during her brief presence in the drawing room. Ramadi's name for herself is "Didi." The Minister's son, Mr. Tula Bunnag, and nephew, Mr. Taw Bunnag, also were present.

Mme. Rajamaitri wore blue, the short taffeta tunic dotted in coral, and a corsage of roses.

Mme. Saito, wife of the Ambassador of Japan, who has spent the summer at Virginia Beach, was being welcomed by friends as the reception was the first function she had attended since her return. She wore a gown of black and white chiffon with a black hat.

The Ambassador of Mexico and Senora de Castillo Najera were there accompanied by their daughter, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, and their sons, Luis and Francisco, as well as their niece, Senorita Lupe Davila. Senora de Najera sat conversing with Mme. Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Ecuador, who was accompanied by the First Secretary of the Legation and Senora de Mantille-Ortega. They were joined by the Ambassador of Cuba and other friends who stopped for a greeting as they passed.

The Minister of Denmark, Mr. Otto Wadsted, was there, but Mme. Wadsted was unable to be present. Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom, who have just come back from New York, where they went to vote before returning to the Capital from their summer place in Bluemont, were also among the guests. Mrs. Bloom was in a brown costume with a hat in the latest mode, and Miss Bloom wore navy blue.

Another guest was Mrs. Thomas C. Dawson. Her son, Mr. Allan Dawson, secretary of the American Embassy in Brazil, has just arrived here for a visit. He came on the Southern Prince, on which Senora de Adalberto Aranha, sister-in-law of the Ambassador of Brazil, also arrived with her two daughters to join Senor Adalberto Aranha, who came by plane several weeks ago.

The Attorney General and Mrs. William S. Cummings and the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Ernest Draper were there also.

Among the other guests were Col. and Mrs. Consuelo A. Seoane, Dr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, who spent part of the summer abroad and completed their vacation in Atlantic City; Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer, who have been in Montana and Kentucky during the season; the General Counsel of the Federal Reserve and Mrs. Walter Wyatt, the Legal Adviser to the State Department and Mrs. Green H. Hackworth.

Also there were the Assistant Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Dimitriu. Mme. Dimitriu's mother, Mrs. John Bennett, is in Baltimore, where Judge Bennett, her father, is in the hospital.

The Commercial Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell were accompanied by their attractive daughter, Senorita Eleanor Campbell, who was engaged in conversation with Senor Don Adolpho Paez. Senora de Campbell wore a costume of black with green ostrich feathers on her hat and green suede gloves and shoes.

Others in the large company of guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Burke, Mrs. Burke in black with red beads giving a touch of gay color; Mr. Richard Southgate, Chief of Protocol of the State Department; the former Minister of Panama, Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro; Mr. and Mrs. Abbott Maginnis. Mrs. Maginnis in a suit of autumn brown with a new visor hat of becoming design, and Miss Katherine Fechet.

Gen. Hawkins and Family Arrive Here From Texas

Gen. and Mrs. Hamilton S. Hawkins and their daughter, Miss Anne Gray Hawkins, have arrived in Washington from Fort Bliss, Texas, to make their home. They have taken a house in Cleveland Park.

To Entertain Fraternity.

Mrs. Otto Praeger and Mrs. Carl J. Barbee will be hostesses at luncheon at the former's home tomorrow. Their guests will include the members of the Alpha Chi Omega Women's Fraternity. Following the luncheon, Mrs. Robert Scott, newly elected president of the local chapter Alpha Epsilon Alpha, will preside at a short meeting.

Three Members of the Younger Set Who Will Be Among Debutantes This Year

Popular in Washington, Miss Gaddis will take part in the debutante activities here during the season as well as those in nearby Virginia. Known as Bobby to her friends, she is an ardent horsewoman and spends much of her time riding to hounds.

Foibles and Folks

By Marylyn Reeve.

Usually when a young person makes her debut she suddenly and without any preparation leaps from the days of even, quiet hours, study and sports, to crowded moments caught in the whirling wheel of social activity—but not so Bette Hartz, who will be among this year's bouquet of buds. For the past two years she has been one of the most popular youngsters in town, going to every party and when there weren't parties, making the rounds of the favorite night spots.

Teas are in the lead in popularity at this time, so much so in fact that ere long the mornings will have to have their name and hours changed so as to provide enough afternoons. Bette's tea will be during November, probably at Thanksgiving, and will be in the Barge L. Hartz's Edgemoor Lane home.

Have you ever wondered how it was that the President and his Cabinet officials nearly always had clear weather for their trips around this vicinity? Well, we have. Also, we were just a bit puzzled as to how the White House functions—those in the garden—managed to have clear skies. The secret is out. There is in the Navy Department one Commander Joseph B. Anderson, who is a whizz at "weather-telling." Only once in all of his predictions has there been any complaint and that was when a light rain fell. Someone mentioned it in fun and he answered with a merry twinkle, a laugh and "Don't you know the difference between a drizzle or light rain and a mist?"

* * * *

Just as the sky had quite definitely taken on the darker shades, and "O'Leary the Lamplighter had come posting up the street," we saw two very tall and distinguished gentlemen deep in conversation on the corner of Connecticut and Wyoming avenues. They were the Danish Minister, Mr. Otto Wadsted and the former Panamanian envoy, Dr. Ricardo Alfaro. Both very elegant in pin stripes and glistening toppers.

Leaving them, we passed the circular Dresden and were promptly reminded that Brad Ross and his mother, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, are about to move from their habitat farther down the avenue to this spacious and mellowed old place.

Speaking of moving—1709 Massachusetts avenue, the Finnish Legation, is in the throes of packing. It will not be long before huge vans haul crates, trunks, and what-nots to George Backus' brick and white-columned house on Tracy place, which the Minister and Mme. Jarnefelt have leased.

* * * *

Young Rudolfo Arias arrived in Washington last evening and was met at the station by his aunt, Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Ecuador. Just before train-time some one anxiously asked what train the nephew was on. Mme. Alfaro quickly replied, "Oh, the seven and a half one."

Looking not in the least like people who work all day long, Margaret McMullen and Lyle O'Rourke were having cocktails in the Mayflower lounge. Margaret's frock was of simply-designed black crepe, and her black chapeau was one of those that defy breezes and winds, and its brim was saucily tucked up on each side with a bright clip. Her brother, John, who is one of the best dancers of the younger set, will be sadly missed this year, as he is entering M. I. T. When not studying and having exams there, he will be eating baked beans and brown bread or taking his place in the Bostonian stag lines.

* * * *

Jack Hays, in his long gray car with its monogram of red and chromium, slowly pulled into line with the other impatiently waiting cars at the Q street traffic light. He looked for all the world like a very young and successful banker. Had there not been the mere matter of two cars in between, we should have leaned out and asked for the latest news of the Ramsdell Cummings and the Bill Christies and whether they are at last in Peru or not.

Sally Mitchell LeFevre is not going to take the debutante's usual post-graduate course of typing and the art of making pot hooks. Instead, she is following her hobby of designing and is going in for this particular phase of art in a very serious way. So, when you see this petite blonde person sallying forth in some new breath-taking creation, you will probably be quite safe in guessing it is one of her own model.

Max Jeweler Takes Bride

The wedding of Miss Doris Rosenbloom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Alvin Rosenbloom, and Mr. Max Jeweler, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Mr. Rosenbloom gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a gown of white satin fashioned with a fitted redingote of mousseline de soie, the long skirt of which terminated in a flaring train. Her fingertip length tulle veil fell in graceful tiers from a coronet of lace.

Miss Rose Jeweler was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a gown of chartreuse chiffon, and carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Mr. Jack Jeweler attended his brother as best man. A reception followed the ceremony. Later, Mr. Jeweler and his bride left for New York, where they will remain until Saturday when they will sail on the S. S. Rotterdam for a cruise to the West Indies and South America. Two Foreign Ministers Here Are Authors of New Books

Albania Envoy Writes First History of His Country Ever Published in English; Head of Greek Legation Offers Treatise on Post-Byzantine Painting.

By Dudley Harmon.

Two heads of foreign legations here are breaking into print. They are the Minister of Albania, Mr. Faik Konitza, who has written the first history of his country ever to be published in English, and Mr. Dimitrios Sicilianos, the Greek Minister, who has had published a treatise on post-Byzantine paintings and is preparing a companion piece of illustrations to go with it.

Mr. Konitza's work will be the first history of his country to appear since 1854 and will distinguish him as one of the few historians of Albania. He has been engaged in writing the book for nearly a year and much careful research preceded the actual preparation of the material. He spent many months in London going through ancient manuscripts.

His history will cover the 2,700 years of his country's existence, the most difficult period of which, from the standpoint of the historian, is that of the last 100 years, with repeated wars and changing boundary lines.

Mr. Konitza has been in Washington ten years and ranks fourth among the 37 ministers representing their governments here. His brother, Mr. Mehmet Konitza, is adviser to the King of Albania and was formerly Minister to the Court of St. James.

Mr. Sicilianos took up the study of Byzantine art of the period from 1450 to 1750 because he was tired of hearing persons say such paintings tended to decadence and were merely a rehash of pure Byzantine. After a comprehensive study which led him to every important art center in Italy and Greece, he became so enthusiastic about this type of art that he acquired 50-odd originals and has hung several in the legation here. In his book, he answers those critics who have depreciated post-Byzantine paintings.

The Greek Minister has two other avocations: The study of the works of El Greco, the Greek who went to Spain and painted religious pictures in the Byzantine manner, and the collection of objects d'art ranging all the way from priceless Greek embroideries to soup tureens. His great ambition is to own an El Greco original. He frequently lectures in New York on art before a society of Greek scientists and is planning to talk before this group in November.

The massive brick Greek legation on Q street is filled with treasures which the minister has acquired over a period of years. Delicate Tanagra statuettes, rare old enameled Chinese bowls, and impassive Chinese ladies carved in stone are just a few—the others are at his home in Athens.

Rich Silks for Daytime and Evening Herald the Coronation

Very modern is the evening gown below of double-laced black silk satin with the new lamp shade tunic. It should be worn with jewels or jet accessories. The garnet taffeta at right would make any woman look like a duchess. Its circles of fluting surrounding paillettes, the covered shoulder and the back fullness, together with the return of garnet to fashion are all features of the evening mode. The gloves are pale pink kid embroidered in gold.

By Ethel Ehlen.,
The Post Fashion Editor.

New fabrics and new silhouettes create an entirely new fashion picture in the realm of silks for fall and winter. It's a season of "influences," with France and England sharing honors of inspiration through Directoire, Victorian and Edwardian fashions, which register for both afternoon and evening in elegance and luxury. The coming coronation of King Edward VIII is also influencing the mode, particularly in relation to color. The glory of Old Spain is reflected in hats and frocks with romantic touches of lace and intricate styling.

Women are tiring of the severe and ultra-sophisticated costume as a permanent fashion and are beginning to realize how picturesque and dramatic afternoon clothes can be, when styled after the current feminine trends. Lovely rich silk satins and silk crepes, silks shot with metal or crusted all over with shining spots of metal, silk velvets in plain and patterener weaves as represented in the Nation-wide silk parade of fall fashions which starts today, furnish excellent mediums for glamorous costumes.

Black runs far ahead of any color for the first fall frock. Black with a dash of color is next in importance, particularly when combined with coronation blue or red, Tudor blue, ruby red or Kent green. Wines have taken on a new mellowness like old burgundys and clarets and are called "grape tones" or vintage shades. The new browns verge on the ginger tones and the greens are softer. Blues are high style, shading from the spruce blues to moonstones. Color contrasts have taken on a new importance because of the merging of unusual combinations, such as—wine with spruce blue and the like.

There are quantity Edwardian princess frocks, buttoned al lthe way down like your grandmother's basque or modified for the modern mode by softer bodices and belts to break the severe princess line. Jaunty little silk velvet hats with towering feathers, silk velvet gloves to match, jewelry in the elaborate treatments of the last century enhance the period styling.

The basic frock is more important than ever, in black silk to be worn throughout the day, dressed up for afternoon by the addition of jewelled pins or clips, strands of pearls and formal accessories. Finish as well as color mark the contrasting accessories this season—dull silk velvets with frocks in shiny silks; gleaming satins to wear with silks in dull finishes. The evening picture is one of drama and romance! Directoire fashions in soft silk damasks and satins, made with long slender skirts and very high-waisted tiny bodices, are a delight to the slim-figured person. Bands of fur around the hem give a grand regal look, while not detracting from the youthful lines. These directoire bonnets of silk velvet with plumes frame smart young faces outlined with flat ringlets.

Two Influences Interpreted.

Victorian and Edwardian influences are interpreted in rich silks which have the dignity and elegance of hat era. Rustling silk taffetas and silk brocades with spreading skirts and back fullness reminiscent of the bustle, swish across the modern ballroom floors; their wearers appearing to have stepped from the pages of an old print. Rolls and pompadours in coiffures, feathers in the hair, velvet bands with jewelled clasps encircling throats or wrists, have an authenthic period air. There are also charming slim gowns in black Lyons velvet with shoestring straps and daring decolletage, reminiscent of Sargent's portraits.

If one insists upon being modern, there are streamlined gowns of gleaming silk metals—the gold metallic silks are plated in 24 karat gold. Lustrous, double-faced silk satins fashion gowns with flaring tunics and sheaths that mold the figure like a glove.

Little Kittens, Easy to Make With Needle, Are Fine Toys

Pattern 5683.

THREE little kittens lost their mittens and here they are looking very happy anyhow. And well they may, for they know they'll bring joy to many a kiddie as well as to the needle woman who'll find them made in no time. They, as well as the duck, are made of but two pieces with the clothes separate. Of course, one kitten alone makes an attractive toy, too. In pattern 5683 you will find a pattern and directions for making a 7x9½ inch kitten (they are all the same) and the 8x10 inch duck as well as all the clothes; material requirements.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

ALL of a sudden Manhattan has become astonishingly traffic-conscious and the citizens are actually looking before they leap across the avenue against the red light. We are being constantly battered with "drive safety" campaigns, and both motorists and pedestrians are actually being careful in one of the world's most careless cities.

ALICE HUGHES.

This consciousness is being pushed along by our new traffic rules, which provide all sorts of modest speed for cars—including eight miles an hour turning a corner, instead of 88, which is the taxi driver's par for the course. Each violation draws a stamp on the license, and when it achieves four, one is probably hanged publicly in Central Park.

I am in grave jeopardy. All my driving is done in the heart of the island, where the traffic is maddest and parking is almost impossible. As a result, I am told that I drive, think and even use language like a taxi driver. All I need is a badge and a three-day beard. When I ride in a taxi I really do all the driving. The hacker merely holds the wheel, like a robot, and mutters. Under the new stringency, it is probable that these pieces will ultimately be written from jail.

Visitors always complain bitterly that New Yorkers are a sour-faced lot, and it is a just charge. But the sheer nerve strain of trotting about the heart of town year after year is truly incredible, and turns us into chronic frowners and automatic curb-leapers. Very few of us are really sore.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Reports from London state that our Miriam Hopkins is slimmer than ever, if possible. She's one of the many who have turned themselves over to Dr. Jean Square, who has thought up a new reducing stunt from Japanese sources. Three people work on the customer at once, the idea being to exercise the muscles against their natural motion, and each treatment takes a half hour. Quite a beating one takes, too, I hear, but it works, if you are not torn apart. . .

Speaking of our Japanese brethren, Able Seamen Ideta and Miszutani did sentry-go on Riverside drive while the two Nipponese cruisers lay in the Hudson recently. Asked by the Inquiring Reporter, as a novelty, what they thought of American girls, Seaman Ideta replied, through an honorable interpreter, "As girls, very pretty and very fine. As wives—too fresh!"

Mayor La Guardia's anti-noise campaign thunders on. The other day 21 citizens were hauled before the bar of justice for unnecessary blatting of motor horns. Magistrate Aurelio said, as he clapped a two-dollar fine on one and all, "These horns have made jumping-jacks out of the city's people." A Daniel come to judgement! . . .

Now that Ginger Rogers is back in circulation after the Law Ayres debacle, she is being beaued around plenty. Johnny Green, the well-known jazz maestro (or is it swing?) is said to be leading man at the moment, but is being pianissimo on the subject until his divorce becomes final. . . .

I saw gorgeous Anita Counihan, now Colby, the other evening—the beauteous model who made her movie debut in "Mary of Scotland." One of her most devoted swains is big Quentin Reynolds, who writes pieces for a national nickel weekly.

Did you ever stop to wonder what poor old Paris will do when and if it ever runs out of style sources? Every year they run through a half a dozen or more, from the Incas, the Aztecs and the Hopis to the dudes and dudesses of the eighteenth century. Every batch of bulletins that crashes to my battered desk brings a few news ones. Today, for instance, I learn with well-concealed amazement that one great milliner is making stocking caps for ladies like those worn by Paris furniture movers, and that a noted dressmaker is putting beaded American Indian designs on French dresses pour le good old sport! Long service in the style trenches has made me almost impervious, thank Heaven, to these shocks!

CAPITAL MANNERS

Air of Casualness Now Prevails in Younger Generation.

By Margaret Wallace.

THIS is the age of casualness among young people who belong to the same social circles. They call each other by their first names on short acquaintance. One young girl, who recently has come to Washington after being at school in England is puzzled by this habit and has written the following letter which may be of interest to other young girls.

"DEAR MISS WALLACE—I recently have come to Washington from England to live with my aunt. She has introduced me to a group of very nice young men and women. The very first time I met them they called me by my first name and evidently expect me to do the same. Of course, in England, girls often call each other by their first names on very short acquaintance, but the young men do not call young women they have just met by their first names. I find it hard to fall into the habit of first names of this group of young people. I do not want to be a snob. They even introduce me to their friends by my first name and never even mention my last name. Do you think I should respond in the friendly spirit they display and call them all by their first names?

ANSWER—It may not be a custom you are used to but since your new friends, who will doubtless be even closer friends if you are going to live with your aunt permanently, have established this friendly relation with you I do not see how you can very well fail to respond with their first names when they call you by your first name. Of course, it is not good form to introduce you by your first name only. They should at least say "this is Well-bred young men will be very apt to call you "Miss" at first

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

We know that any muscle that is used excessively can fatigue to the point when it will refuse to act While this means loss of function, it is usually a temporary affair. Permit the arm or leg to rest and power is restored. This holds true for the entire body, and nature has wisely arranged our affairs so that sleep and good food will repair our daily wear and tear.

There is a form of inactivity, however, called myasthenia gravis, which, although not a new disease, is not recognized with sufficient accuracy. It is typified by a marked weakness of the voluntary muscles, which tire more quickly than they should following a slight amount of effort.

Weakness Is Symptom.

The first symptom may be a feeling of weakness, particularly at the end of the day. Some patients will observe this effect on rising, but as a rule it will wear away after a few hours. In the late afternoon, however, the depression may become so profound that movement is almost impossible. The face is the first part to be involved. Because the eyelids play so vital a role in human expression the dragging of these structures may be noted by friends. Sometimes the patient himself will observe a blurring of vision or double vision. As the condition grows worse the patient is unable to smile. Hence an aforetime lively, animated countenance may change to one that is dull and lifeless.

At this stage there is nothing that need give concern unless there is interference with swallowing. Should this situation develop there may be some difficulty in taking liquids and they may flow backward through the nose. Later this may extend to soft foods.

Peculiarly enough there is no wasting or atrophy of the muscles, no reduction in size. They appear just too tired to work and hence exercise accelerates fatigue. The arms are more frequently affected than the legs, but both may become increasingly weaker, so that the patient may go about tripping over carpets, dropping even the lightest objects, falling downstairs, etc.

Most cases will show spontaneous improvement and the body will pick up its former tone and become well-nigh normal. The exact character of the malady is not understood. It is not a disorder of the nervous system nor of the blood, although the products of metabolism are somewhat lessened.

Rest Is Factor.

The first essential of treatment, in addition to rest, is the drug ephedrine, which is almost a specific with many of these patients. The amount used may be increased in anticipation of any unusual physical or mental exertion or anything that will tax the victim's strength. Each sufferer learns after a bit to adapt the dose to suit his own special needs. Another compound that is of value is glycin or amino acetic acid.

A typical case is cited as follows: A man 50 years old firsts noted a progressive loss of ability to move the facial structures. The eyelids gradually failed to lift, so that the head had to be tilted backward to permit a tiny crack of light to reach the eyes. He had no control over the lips and tongue, could not speak plainly, and food and saliva dribbled from his mouth. Walking had to be given up, as 20 steps left him completely exhausted. On careful examination no physical defects were found other than badly diseased tonsils. The first attempt at treatment included bed rest with a highly nourishing diet. Later the tonsils were removed. Under a careful regimen of ephedrine the patient was able to resume work with practically normal efficiency.

The physician may advise either drug—ephedrine or glycin—and a fair percentage of these individuals will improve sufficiently to return to work and enjoy a useful life. The importance of ephedrine was discovered accidentally by one who was afflicted with myasthenia gravis.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Bachelor Says if He Were a Girl, He Would Go Manless All His Life Rather Than Pursue a Male.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: An expression you used in one of your columns recently intrigues me greatly. You used the words "candid pursuit" in describing the tactics used by modern girls in "getting their man." I had been searching my own mind for just such an apt description of what the girls seem to be up to today. Have the girls no pride, or am I out of date and old-fashioned? I always have felt that a really nice girl does not run after a man. If the man wants her he will do the pursuing. And if he does not want her, she had best forget him. Of course, there are men who would never find a mate if the mate did not go after them and drag them to the altar, but who would want that sort of man?

• • • •

I am not attractive personally, or desirable financially, but even I have had my troubles dodging determined pursuers, and have been completely amazed at the lengths to which some women will go. When it comes to daily notes and telephone calls, not only to one's home but to one's office, even I rebel and almost forget my early training regarding the respect men owe to women.

• • • •

I work hard and have a number of interests aside from my work, so that my time is pretty well occupied. I read in one of your columns a bit of advice to a girl who wanted to get a certain man without seeming to pursue him. You allowed that she might casually suggest meeting him for lunch. Now, if the man in question happened to have other plans for the day, must he drop them and be polite, or shall he offer excuses and explanations, which are usually received very skeptically by the woman?

If I were a girl, I would go manless forever, rather than run down a reluctant male. And do the girls think the men do not see through their schemes? There are men ill bred enough to boast of their conquests. The girls should hear some of the remarks I have heard. I may be old-fashioned, but I still think a man should do the pursuing, unless he is the spineless kind who enjoys, and feels flattered at, being chosen by some woman. If she wants a Caspar Milquetoast, good luck to her.

I read your column every day and like the sound advice you give the girls—if only they had sense enough to follow it. Success to your work! Very sincerely yours,
BACHELOR.

The Woman's Side.

DEAR BACHELOR: I can think of no more apropos rebuttal of your argument that really nice girls don't pursue the men they desire; and that really fine men are never taken into camp by such tactics, than some remarks recently made by Margaret Lawrence, brilliant young author of "The School of Femininity," a penetrating study into the whys and wherefores of the way of all women.

• • • •

Miss Lawrence remarks that "the really practical women work on getting a man for themselves and quite wisely so . . . We . . . romantics think love is a mutual thing. That is something a girl has to get out of her mind if she wants to marry a man. Men do not love, but they respond to loving and making one respond and keeping him responding is a full-time job."

• • • •

Nearly every woman knows what nearly every man will never know, or at least, never fully believe: to wit, that 90 per cent of all triumphal marches to the altar were maneuvered by the woman who is the heroine of the hour. Some of these women are more subtle than others, of course; and some simply can't be bothered with subtlety, and some don't know how to be subtle. It is the latter two classifications of women who enrage men like yourself, men who prefer to be humored in the delusion that they have won, or will win, their mate against terrific odds.

• • • •

You say if you were a girl you would go manless forever rather than run down a reluctant male. Well, my dear Bachelor, if you were a girl personally unattractive and financially undesirable and hewed inexorably to that line of thought, you probably would go manless forever. You seem to have pigeonholed yourself quite accurately in saying you must be out of date and old-fashioned. I don't believe any intelligent fair-minded person today requires of a woman that she give the lie to her normal natural hunger for matehood and motherhood, in order to appear the essence of feminine desirability.

• • • •

If you like to do your own pursuing and vigorously object to being pursued, the thing to do may be to go some place where women are scarce. Marriageable women outnumber marriageable men in Washington at a rate of about 3 to 1, I have been told. So, if you stay here, you will probably have to resign yourself to being the object of much unsolicited attention from the ladies.
M. H.

Question of Etiquette.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I received from the minister of my church an announcement of his marriage. The announcement was in the form of a special edition of the church paper. Likely each member of the church received one. If this announcement does not necessarily require a gift, don't you think it should be answered by sending congratulations? I would rather write a message than send an engraved or printed card. What is the proper thing to do and say? Yours truly, W. Y.

• • • •

DEAR W. Y.: Since the minister has made an informal announcement of his marriage, acknowledgment of the announcement should likewise be informal. A gift is not necessary, although it would be a very cordial and, I am sure, much appreciated gesture. If a gift is chosen, it can be mailed at the same time as a friendly little note, addressed to both and written on a correspondence card or small size stationery. Such a note should be written by you, speaking for both yourself and your husband, and signed by your name: "Mary Doe Smith," with your married name ("Mrs. James Henry Smith") in parentheses at the left of your signature. In your own words, express your own and your husband's pleasure at hearing of your pastor's good fortune and wish both of them all happiness and success for the future. Shortly after they are settled in their home, make an afternoon call on Mrs. Pastor. M. H.

2 Fined After Fight At Hagerstown Game

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 20.—Rowdyism will not be tolerated at athletic events in Hagerstown and those responsible who are brought before him will receive the maximum sentence, Magistrate John D Dunn warned future offenders in fining two men here yesterday.

One attacked a policeman who sought to quiet the disturbance which started during a soft ball league game. A free-for-all fight followed an umpire's decision on a close play and a local patrolman in plain clothes seated among the fans, tried to stop the melee when Hillard Spielman, 28, attacked him. Spielman was fined $25 and costs and F. A. Gates, $10 for being disorderly.

Labor Disputes Tie Up Plants In Many Cities

Little Violence Reported as Dairy, Steel and Marine Workers Strike.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Chicago, Sept 20.—Labor controversies disturbed cities strung from the East coast to the West tonight, with dairy men, steel workers and marine workers seeking better hours, working conditions and wages.

Little violence was reported, although the situation in the Salinas, Calif., lettuce fields was regarded as potentially dangerous. Shippers and packers theratened to renew operations tomorrow with nonunion labor.

Workers in the lettuce fields are on strike and there has been considerable violence, resulting in the calling out of vigilantes. Representatives of the lettuce packers and the Satte Federation of Labor are to meet with State officials Tuesday in an attempt to bring about a settlement.

Maritime unions of the American Federation of Labor are negotiating with San Francisco ship owners for new contracts October 1. Dissatisfied longshoremen are voting on whether to submit the controversial issues to arbitration.

Guild Strike Hearing.

Attempts to end the American Newspaper Guild's strike against the Seattle Post-Intelligencer failed after three days of negotiation. Tomorrow the National Labor Relations Board will resume a hearing on charges that the Post-Intelligencer violated the national labor relations act by discharging two employes. About 650 persons are out of work as a result of the strike. The strikers are demanding guarantees of increased wages, shorter working hours and union recognition.

Three thousand employes of the Cleveland Street Car System were awarded a 6-cents-an-hour increase.

Five hundred members of the Railway Brotherhoods struck, accusing the Louisiana, Kansas & Texas Railway of violating contracts governing wages, hours and working conditions. Trains on the line were idle.

Steel Plant Strike.

There was considerable controversy in the Pittsburgh steel area, but only one strike was reported—at the Corapolis, Pa., plant of the Standard Steel Spring Co. 700 men walked out, and the plant closed. Twenty-three thousand workers in sheet and tin plate mills asked wage increases from the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co.

New York State dairy leaders called a milk strike, effective Thursday, and threatened to cut off the supply for metropolitan New York except for hospitals and babies. They are demanding higher prices to producers.

The Drivers Union, which serves wholesale grocers in Minneapolis, was on strike demanding union recognition, collective bargaining and wage increases. Members of the Flour and Cereal Workers Union struck, making similar demands.

Arkansas Tenant Parleys On Today

Hot Springs, Ark., Sept. 20 (AP).—While a Federal grand jury prepared to study charges of peonage in the Arkansas cotton country, Gov. J. M. Futrell today expressed the beilef a solution of the South's age-old sharecropper problem would be found through conferences opening tomorrow.

"The main end to be gained is substitution of farm owners for farm tenants," the Governor said. "The policy of this country should be to encourage and stimulate the owning of homes."

He will address the opening conference of his 57-man farm tenancy commission. The meeting will be a forerunner of Futrell's proposed South-wide parley on the question.

The Federal grand jury tentatively set its inquiry for next Wednesday at Little Rock. Two Department of Justice attorneys and a dozen others are expected to testify.

The peonage charges, which precipitated an investigation by the Department of Justice, were made during a cotton choppers' strike sponsored last spring by the Southern Farm Tenants Union.

Japanese Patrols Arm.

Hankow, Sept. 20 (AP).—Japanese naval authorities, aroused by the slaying of a consular policeman, today issued full service equipment to naval patrols of the Japanese concession here.

Edith Maxwell Visits Washington

Free on bond and promised a new trial, Edith Maxwell, young Virginia school teacher accused of killing her father with a slipper, saw the glories of Washington for the first time yesterday. She is shown with Charles Henry Smith, prominent Alexandria attorney, who will fight for her acquittal in November.

passed on Edith's case last November pondered it only 24 minutes and then returned to sentence Edith to 25 years in the penitentiary.

Wide Protest Followed.

The harshness of that verdict aroused people throughout the world. Readers of The Post, convinced the girl had been given a raw deal, contributed nearly $1,000 toward a defense fund. Attorney Smith, of Alexandria, offered his services, and a fight for a new trial was begun.

Ten days ago this fight bore fruit. The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, meeting in Staunton, decreed that the evidence in Edith Maxwell's case did not justify a first degree murder verdict and a 25-year sentence. It ordered a new trial.

In releasing Edith on $6,000 bond Saturday, Judge H. A. W. Skeen set November 16 as the date of her new trial.

After Edith had called on her mother at the Maxwell home in Pound, a cross-roads town near Wise, Attorney Smith advised her to try a change of scenery for a while.

Watching her yesterday as she stared happily at the Capitol, the Monument and the Lincoln Memorial—and was not herself stared at—Smith concluded his advice was good.

Shipping Speeded As Pacts Near End

San Francisco, Sept. 20 (AP).—Shipping along the Pacific Coast was speeded up tonight, spurred by the widespread efforts to move cargo before September 30, when agreements between waterfront employers and unions expire.

Routings of several ships were changed so they would be able to clear West Coast ports before the zero hour. Sharp increases in waterfront activity were reported, particularly in north Pacific ports and at San Pedro, the Los Angeles harbor. Honolulu housewives, remembering the bloody and prolonged maritime strike in 1934, were increasing foodstuff supplies.

Approach of the expiration time of the agreements which ended the 1934 strike found waterfront employers and the unions far apart in their efforts to negotiate new agreements.

Church Loyalty Mass Meeting Here Sept. 29

Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, will give the principal address.

There will be three brief addresses in addition, Henry C. Barden, executive secretary, announced yesterday. One of the speakers will be the Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, D. D., of New York, formerly pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church in Washington. Other addresses will be given by the Rev. John Keating Cartwright, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation.

There also will be a greeting by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, Protestant Episcopal Church.

The United States Army Band will play music at the beginning of and after the religious service, and during the program these musical groups will present numbers: the National Capital Choir of Universalist National Memorial Church; the Choristers of Immaculate Conception School; and the Quartet of Washington Hebrew Congregation. Miss Helen Howison, soprano of Covenant First Presbyterian Church, will be soloist.

The co-operative service, like that of last year, has been planned to stimulate interest in church loyalty and attendance. The meeting last year drew a capacity audience to Constitution Hall and was broadcast to the Nation.

Thomas Will Address Press Club Tomorrow

The Socialist approach to the present campaign will be discussed by Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, at a special luncheon of the National Press Club Tuesday at 12:30 p. m.

George W. Stimpson, club president, announced that the Thomas address would be one of the last of the special luncheon series before the November elections. The club, however, will continue its custom of having prominent speakers from time to time.

Business Group Coerces Labor, Democrat Says

Tobin Cites Plan by Weir to Offer 'Information' to Working Men.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—a charge that the National Association of Manufacturers was attempting to "coerce" industrial workers in voting againt President Roosevelt through a campaign to provide them with "factual information" was made by Daniel J. Tobin, labor chairman of the Democratic National Committee, in a statement today.

Tobin said the attempt was embodied in a plan submitted to plant managers by Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the association's national industrial information committee which, Tobin said, "proposes to 'constructively set about to correct the half-truths and pure falsehoods being propagated' by 'propagandists attacking our American business system.'"

Tobin said that although the suggested plan does not mention candidates of either of the major parties by name, "the so-called 'five main lines of attack'" were definitely directed at the policies of the present Administration "and is nothing more than a subtle method of coercing workers into voting the Republican ticket both out of fear and out of the illusion that a Republican Administration would guarantee great prosperity, higher wages and better working conditions."

The labor chairman said the campaign included the use of meetings, motion pictures and printed matter to combat such things as "'propagation of the idea the industry can assume ever larger tax burdens,' and 'circulation of the opinion that our industrial system does not provide a satisfactory standard of living for the working man.'"

Terming Weir the "arch foe of labor" and the subject of a "chameleon act," Tobin expressed the hope that "no workers will be deceived by this sweet music from the benevolent old Manufacturers Association which suddenly has discovered that employers and employes are one great big happy family united against the common foe of a nasty old Government."

New Model Home Attracts Visitors

The "autumn edition" of The Washington Post model home opening yesterday at Burnt Mills Hills, attracted many visitors. It is located in the development of the R. E. Latimer Co, for which Phil D. Poston, of Silver Spring, Md., is director of sales.

Burnt Mills Hills and the model home may be seen by going out the Colesville pike 3 miles beyond the traffic light at Silver Spring. The new exhibit dwelling is a splendid reproduction of the Pennsylvania type of the Dutch farmhouse.

Each room is of generous size and decorated in pure Colonial manner. The home is surrounded by equally beautiful homes of varied farmhouse types on one to five acre sites.

The home contains a living room, dining room, library, electric kitchen, four bedrooms, two baths, recreation room, card table, maid's room and bath and two-car built-in garage. Designed by Dillon & Abel, it will be open from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. on Sundays and noon to 8 p. m. on weekdays.

$212,000,000 Co-op Sales Reported

By the Associated Press.

Sales of $212,000,000 by farmers' co-operative fruit and vegetable associations in the 1935-36 marketing season were reported yesterday by the Farm Credit Administration.

This was said to be an increase of 6 per cent over sales the previous season, with most of the gains in Western States, where citrus fruit, sugar beet and fruit marketing organizations are numerous.

The FCA said 166,000 farmers used the co-operative sales associations last season, compared with 158,000 the previous season, although the total number of units remained about the same—1,003.

California fruit and vegetable growers accounted for $112,000,000, or more than half the total sales, while Florida, with $11,000,000, was second, although sales and membership in co-operatives there were reported to have declined.

Washington was third in State volume with $11,000,000 sales, followed by Colorado, Oregon and Michigan.

Kremlin Seeks to Halt Party Purge 'Excesses'

Moscow, Sept. 19 (AP).—The Kremlin tonight ordered a halt to "vindictive excesses" in the Communist Party purge which followed upon the execution of 16 confessed plotters against the Stalin regime in August.

Admitting that "house cleaning" in the outlands may have resulted in the dismissal of some innocent Soviet citizens from their positions, government leaders warned subordinates honest vigilance was preferred to "revenge and expulsions just to make a showing."

Titulescue Sinking.

St. Moritz, Switzerladn, Sept. 20 (AP).—The condition of Nicolas Titulescu, former Rumanian foreign minister, was grave tonight. After he was given a third blood transfusion, five physicians signed a bulletin which said his condition was serious. Titulescu is suffering from a form of blodo poisoning and malarial fever.

The Post Invites Contributions To Press Edith Maxwell Fight

Edith Maxwell is free on bail after 14 months in jail, following sentence of 25 years in prison on the charge of murdering her father.

Wtih the aid of money given by its subscribers, The Washington Post has won half the battle in securing justice for this girl.

Miss Maxwell must again face the court and there must be an acquittal before she is actually free to resume life as a country school teacher.

The fund subscribed to by readers of The Washington Post is nearly exhausted. All the legal expenses of the appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals were paid out of this fund. Charles Henry Smith, noted attorney of Alexandria, Va., gave his services without fee, to assist The Post in its fight in behalf of Miss Maxwell.

A new fund of $1,000 is necessary to conduct the new trial, set for November 16, when a change of venue will be asked by Smith from Wise County.

Witnesses will have to be interviewed and medical depositions obtained. Expenses of witnesses will have to be paid. Smith again will contribute his services, which will make the amount needed the minimum figure.

With the fight half won and chances of complete victory bright, it is believed readers of The Washington Post will want to see it through.

The invitation to contribute to this fund therefore is extended again.

The only interest of The Post in this case is justice. It is the belief of this newspaper that there is no evidence in this case that the cause of death of Trigg Maxwell was the tap on the head from his daughter's shoe.

The Washington Post will have no part in any effort to exploit this girl, and will discourage such attempts. The Post would like to see her back at her teacher's desk, earning her living like any other normal and decent young woman.

Enclosed find—as a contribution to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund to be used by The Washington Post in her retrial.

Wax Meats.

If you want to see a really appetizing collection of wax meats, drop in at the butcher shop studio of Mrs. Russell Roller over at the Department of Agriculture's extension offices in Building F.

You will find hams browned to a Virginian's delight, pot roasts and rib roasts of beef that will make your mouth water and hamburger-onion rolls that would drive Wimpy into tantrums. So real do the meats look on their gravy-splattered plates that you can hardly help but sniff in anticipation or poke the meat with your fingers.

There's a moral behind every one of these wax meats—perhaps its the superior quality meats secured from improved feeding methods or what the housewife should look for in purchasing meat. Mrs Roller is no meat specialist, but, a former artist and art teacher, she can put into color and form all the delicate requirements of the department's meat and home economics specialists.

The roast that is to be copied is prepared under ideal conditions by the home economics department. While the roast is still fresh out of the oven Mrs. Roller makes a color sketch.

When the meat has cooled it is cast into plaster several inches thick. The cast is made in several pieces, a thin film of soapwater separating each piece. The soapwater makes it easy to take the plaster mold apart.

The mold is then placed together again and kept in place with cord. A hole is always left at the bottom, and into this hole Mrs. Roller pours beeswax.

By turning the plaster mold round and round, the beeswax circulates throughout the mold, filling in every depression. The wax must not cool too quickly, but it also must not be too hot or it will soak into the plaster. Mrs. Roller confesses she has no scientific way of determining how hot the wax it, just lets the wax heat until she thinks it looks about right.

When the plaster cast is removed, she does a little hand sculpturing on the wax model, chipping out the bones, rounding the meat in one spot, depressing it elsewhere. That done, she paints the wax in oils. All the delicate shadings of oven brown are reproduced while the bones have all the cracks and browned ivory smoothness of roasted bones.

The wax meats are long-lived. The first rib roast Mrs. Roller made ten years ago is still being shown at agricultural fairs. An impressive stock of meats is always kept on hand in the butcher shop studio. The studio is also littered with dozens of models ranging from inch-high rabbits to three-foot eagles, all of which Mrs. Roller has had to reproduce at some time.

So realistic have her wax meats proven that Mrs. Roller has requests for duplicates from the live-stock trade associations and expositions. She also has built up a rather profitable after-working hours business in supplying wax models of foods to hospitals and hotel and restaurant schools. Some day, Mrs. Roller expects, if she continues to get as many requests as she has, she will go into business on her own.

The theory that lumber from dead trees is not as sound as lumber from live trees has been debunked by studies of G. W. Trayer of the Forest Service.

Civic Group Opens Drive For Theater

New Group Will Launch Citywide Campaign for Support.

Season of Eight Plays on Wardman Park Stage Planned.

Washington is to have its own civic theater, one which District Commissioner Melvin Hazen urges the city to support.

A city-wide campaign is being launched this week to raise 1,500 season membership subscriptions for the newly organized Washington Civic Theater, which hopes to give the city the theatrical "break" which the National Symphony Orchestra has given it musically.

Backed by business men and civic leaders of Washington, with an advisory council enlisting the aid of the leaders of many of the city's largest organizations, and stocked with the best theatrical talent of the city, the theater is bringing Day Tuttle, director, known throughout his profession, and William Girvan, a professional technical director, to Washington to guide its first season.

Nightly Plays Aim.

Eight plays will be produced, one a month, October through May, in Wardman Park Theater, the most ambitious season ever attempted by a noncommercial theater in Washington. The eventual aim of the project is to establish in Washington a fully-equipped and modern theater building, presenting plays every night.

The advisory council is not complete, but members announced to date include Mrs. Lloyd Biddle, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs; Albert E. Conradis, president of the Junior Board of Commerce; Mrs. John Allen Dougherty, Mrs. Karl Fenning, president of the Twentieth Century Club; Edwin C. Graham, president of the Hamilton Bank; Mrs. Richard Hogue, president of the Women's University Club; Thomas Ellis Lodge, Mrs. W. W. Mackall, jr., president of the Junior League; Lowell Mellett, editor of the Daily News; Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post; Edgar Morris, president of the Washington Board of Trade; Dr. William McClellan, president of the Potomac Electric & Power Co.; Huston Thompson, president of the Town Hall; Miss Ella Warner, president of the Soroptimists, and Mrs. Harvey Wiley, president of the Woman's City Club.

Board of Governors.

The board of governors of the Washington Civic Theater is headed by Lee D. Butler and includes Oliver Gasch, first vice president; Dorothea J. Lewis, second vice president; John Garland Pollard, jr., treasurer; Dr. Frederick V. Rand, secretary, and Marvin Beers, Nelson B. Bell, Olin Dows, Selma Klein, Margery Rice and Caroline Thompson. Five members of this board and Richard P. Creyke, Eileen Fowler, Robert M. Miller and Ethel Prince make up the production committee.

Tuttle will come directly to Washington from his Westchester Playhouse in Mount Kisco, N. Y. At this theater and also at the Ridgeway Theater at White Plains, N. Y., he has directed some 30 plays in the last three summer seasons, and such famous stars as Burgess Meredith, Ina Claire, Henry Fonda, Margaret Sullivan and Henry Hull. A graduate of the Yale Drama School and a former member of the Lobero Theater in Santa Barbara and the American Laboratory Theater, he is known as an actor and playwright as well as director.

Last Rites Today For E. L. Graham

Services will be conducted today at 5:30 p. m. at Hysong's funeral parlor for E. Leonard Graham, 70, former employe of the Pension Bureau and the Veterans' Administration, who died last Friday at Sibley Hospital. Burial in Marion, Ohio, birthplace of his wife, will follow cremation at Cedar Hill Crematory.

Entering Government service in Columbus, Ohio, in 1895, in a branch office of the Pension Bureau, Graham came to the Capital in 1913 as chief of a section of the disbursing division, when all branches were merged into the central agency.

He retained his post when Pension Bureau activities were taken over by the Veterans' Administration in 1930.

Mr. Graham is survived by his wife and two sons, Loring, of this city, and La Mar, of Denver.

Sweetheart of No. 10 Weds

The policemen at the Tenth Precinct had been so like brothers to Mrs. Lombardi, the former Rose Tassa, ever since she was a girl that she invited them all to the wedding and the party, breaking precedent by writing the invitation in the police incidental book.

Defeatist State of Mind Born Of Slump Decried by Rector

America Must Fight Off Pessimism and Renounce 'Human Radio Messiahs' If It Would Escape Dictatorship, Says Rev. W. R. Moody.

America must fight off a depression-born defeatist state of mind to survive as a free people, the Rev. William R. Moody, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, declared yesterday in his first sermon since returning from Europe.

Unless this fight is made, and citizens renounce "human radio messiahs," the country is going to fall into a dictatorship, he warned. Adolf Hitler, he declared, achieved power in Germany because the people had so tasted bitter dregs, so lost confidence in themselves that they were "ready to follow any shallow human massiah" rather than "fight the battle on their own."

In America, he said, this same state of mind has brought followers to "messiahs like Father Divine (the New York colored clergyman) who persuades men and women to turn over their pay envelopes to him in returun for food, shelter and management, simply because they have lost confidence in themselves and are ripe to follow any man who offers escape from the harsh world.

"Yet Father Divine," the rector declared, "is the least dangerous of the several messiahs who are today promising us 'security' at the cost of freedom, because his 'heavens' are scarcely more grotesque and the slavery in them no more real than those to be found in the Utopian schemes which bait the traps laid for us by other radio messiahs, rabble rousers and visionary dreamers who are before the public."

Although people accept dictatorship for its security, Mr. Moody asserted, security can not be "created by act of Congress or fiat of ditcator." There is less real security in Germany and Italy than in the United States, he added.

"The only real security is that which you can win for yourself by the strength of your character, the courage of your heart, by the keenness of your mind, and by your faith and trust in God," he said. "Those who trust in men and schemes of men will from men obtain disillusionment. God's way of helping a man is not to shield him from the hardships of the world, but through religion to give him a ruggedness of heart and a calmness of soul to overcome those hardships.

"The trouble is that people are looking for a hide-out rather than strength. God never has been a refuge in this sense, but in the sense that He gives strength of mind and character to stand against the storm."

Silver Spring Lions Will Hear Davidson

2d Man Seized In Brutal Death Of D. C. Typist

Police investigating the brutal murder of Mrs. Florence Goodwin, 43-year-old Government typist, arrested a second man yesterday and questioned him as to the whereabouts of a former janitor employed by her.

As the suspect was being questioned, Joseph Caw, police finger-print expert, searched the room in the fashionable rooming house at 1102 Sixteenth street northwest, where Mrs. Goodwin's body was found early Friday.

Lieut. John H. Fowler, who is leading the investigation, said several fingerprint smears were found on a fourth-floor window in a room that had been vacant for some time. At first, Fowler said, it appeared as if someone may have tried to get out of the house through the window. This theory was dropped, however, when thick dust was noticed on the window sills and frame.

Meanwhile, Carl D. Chase, 25-year-old colored houseman, still maintained his innocence and resisted the constant questioning of police.

Capt. Ira E. Keck, acting chief of detectives, said he was confident the case soon would be cleaned up.

Keck said roomers in the house told of hearing the sound of running water in the basement of the house about 10 a. m. Chase admitted he had washed himself in the cellar about this time. His duties in the house that morning consisted only the making up of four beds.

Chase has repeatedly denied any connection with the slaying.

The man arrested yesterday and held at the First Precinct Station said he was Harry Tipton, colored, 37, of the 1400 block of Fourteenth street northwest. He was seized in a house in Ninth street northwest, when he made inquiries about a former janitor police are searching for. Police said he apparently has no knowledge of the crime, but that he will be questioned about the suspect sought.

Seven persons were injured, one critically, when automobiles operated by Harry West, jr., of Darnestown, Md., and Jesse Higgins, 31, of Rockville, Md., were in head-on collision on the Frederick road at Middlebrook hill north of Gaithersburg, Md.

West was charged with operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor and reckless driving. He was released on $1,000 bond posted by his father. West suffered lacerations on the legs and bruises.

Higgins and his wife, who is 25, were taken to Georgetown Hospital, where Mrs. Higgins was said to be in critical condition. She suffered fractures of the jaw and right arm and lacerations of the throat and head and some of her teeth were knocked out. Higgins was cut on the head and legs.

Pole, Lamp Post Broken.

Janie W. Jones, 24, of 948 Ninth street northwest and Catherine Price, 26, of 906 G street northwest, were at Casualty Hospital last night after a car operated by Miss Jones struck successively a tree, a telephone pole and a lamp post, breaking each, off at the base.

Miss Jones suffered injuries of the pelvis and lacerations of the nose. Miss Price was being treated for severe injuries of the back. Two other passengers in the car, John W. Slater, 33, of 904 New York avenue northwest and Roland W. Dorsey, 35, of 748 Ninth street southeast, were treated for minor injuries.

Mrs. Bessie Fribourg, 74, of 216 Eleventh street northwest, was hurt in an accident near Hyattsville, Md.

Her Father's Voice

Gracie, 3, Spellbound as Father Broadcasts Talk From Berlin

Spellbound, pretty 3-year-old Grace Lee Tansill, of 1251 Kearney street, sat last night with eyes glued on the radio in her home.

For a half-hour she had listened without interest to war bulletins from Spain and lilting lullabies. It was all pretty meaningless to Grace until suddenly she heard her father's voice.

From far-off Berlin he spoke—in the Germany of Herr Hitler and of goosestepping Nazi troops.

"Chancellor Hitler," the voice said, "is creating a new Germany. Under him the country is emerging rapidly from the dark cloud that followed Versailles. The picture painted by the American press of a bankrupt Germany is unfounded. Instead of depression and bankruptcy there is a significant advance of the new Germany under Chancellor Hitler, who is the one man who has inspired the spirit of the people. He has a firm hold on them. His personal magnetism as an orator recalls the days of Theodore Roosevelt. He is one of the most powerful orators of the age."

Little Grace didn't care if he was. To her the voice of her father was the best oratory she had ever heard.

The voice went on:

"Hitler is a man who photographs poorly. He is far better looking than his pictures. He has an engaging personality. He is not given to extravagant statements, but to plain simple language and facts."

There was more talk on Germany—temperate talk. After all even an American cannot do otherwise there. Then the flow of flowery praise ceased and a more human voice was heard to say a "good night to Gracie."

Now, that was something a 3-year-old youngster could understand!

Transmitting by short wave his address on "The New Germany," Dr. Charles C. Tansill, professor of history at American University, spoke under the auspices of the Carl Schurz Foundation. The foundation's avowed purpose is to promote friendly relations between the United States and Germany, in memory of the distinguished German-American, Senator Schurz, of Missouri.

Prisoner Slashes Wrists in D. C. Cell

Amory A. Sibley, 32, of 521 First street northeast, a prisoner in the First Precinct station, was sent to Gallinger Hospital for mental observation yesterday when he was found bleeding from cuts in his wrists.

Sibley had been arrested Saturday night and held for investigation. Policeman Francis E. Knott said he noticed the man sitting in the cell with blood flowing from the wounds. The wounds were bandaged at the station house and he was sent to the hospital.

Doctors said the cuts were superficial.

O'Brien Case Suspect Free After Inquiry

'Legs' Oliveri Released When Mobsters Fail to Identify Him.

Victim, Whose Legs Were Shattered, Recounts Shooting Details.

Edward Joseph "Legs" Oliveri, 26, of 1442 Fairmont street northwest, arrested by Federal agents as Vernon "Legs" Tate, sought by police for the racket shooting of Joseph Edward O'Brien, was released late yesterday when O'Brien mobsters failed to identify him.

Meanwhile, O'Brien, said by police to be a small-time Southeast Washington bootlegger, who has been confined to his bed in Providence Hospital since July 21 when both his legs were shattered by bullets from guns of a rival gang, said yesterday:

"I'll go to court and testify against those guys if I have to go in a wheel chair."

O'Brien was referring to Charles "Rags" Warring and five other members of the "Foggy Bottom" gang who have been charged with assault with intent to kill and are out on bond awaiting trial.

Stretched out in his bed, O'Brien related details of the night when he was shot down in front of a lunchroom at Second and G streets southeast.

"At first I thought they were just drunk and having a good time," he said.

Seven members of the Warring mob, alleged Northwest "numbers" and liquor racketeers, drove up in two automobiles, he said. One of the men, later identified as a member of the gang, leaped from the car after O'Brien had been wounded once in the left thigh, and beat him over the head with the butt of a gun. Another man then stood over him and pumped slugs into his right leg, O'Brien said.

Doctors at the hospital yesterday said O'Brien's right knee cap, which was shattered, has healed, though still useless.

A clot has formed in the left leg which has blocked the return of blood. Physicians said it may have to be amputated.

As police reconstruct the crime, O'Brien tried to expand his liquor business into the Northwest section, which is ruled by the Warrings. The Warrings, seeking revenge, sallied into the Southeast haunts of the rival gang and shot down the leader.

In addition to "Rags" Warring, police have taken into custody Sam Bond, Sam Montgomery, "Teddy" Tear, "Cocky" Ware and Jack Sweeney. All have been charged with assault with intent to kill and have been released on bond.

Oliveri was seized Saturday morning with Stanley Petrone, 24, of the first block, K street northwest, by Karl Spiess and James Rogers, agents for the Internal Revenue Bureau. Petrone was charged with possession of a smoke screen. Oliveri, who was said by the agents to be "Legs" Tate, missing link in the O'Brien shooting, was sent to the local police for investigaiton.

Although Lieut. Clement Cox and Detective Sergts. Thomas McVearry and Howard Ogle were skeptical about Oliveri being Tate, they placed him in a line-up before Harry Behrle and William Carpenter, O'Brien's friends.

Behrle and Carpenter said Oliveri was not "Legs" Tate.

Meanwhile, Lieut. Cox said he had definite information as to the identity of Tate and where he can be located.

"That is one man I will never stop searching for," Cox stated. "He must know plenty about the job or he would have given himself up like Ware and Sweeney."

Wagstaffs' Heir Playing Parts In Hollywood

Refusing "to Be Poured in a Mold," He Enjoys Picture Bits.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Sept. 20.—Bored by "pursuit of the dollar," Young Alfred Wagstaff 3d, of New York's railroad-collecting Wagstaffs, has taken refuge in Hollywood, where he seems to feel a passing dollar never gets a second glance.

The scion of the Wagstaff millions emigrated from the East in a 1928 model flivver four months ago to become a gilded extra player.

"I always refused to be poured in a mold," he boasted, "and decided to break entirely with family tradition and try my hand at acting."

Young Wagstaff got his first job tally-hoing at the hounds in hunt scenes of Marion Talley's "Follow Your Heart." Now he has a line in RKO's "General Delivery," and is "Thrilled over it as if it were Hamlet's soliloquy." The line is: "Oh, yeah?"

Explaining his rebellion, Wagstaff says he refused to go to college after prep school and went to work in a broker's office instead.

"But pursuit of the dollar for its own sake bored me to death," he said. "I want to earn money by creative endeavor and be independent of whatever I may eventually inherit.

"I have cut loose from the family entirely—financially, I mean. I live in a cheap furnished apartment, and do a lot of my own cooking. I'm here to play heavy roles—not juveniles—because I did enough of that in society."

Gene Raymond gets the nod to play opposite Lily Pons in her unnamed film vocal, and is all aglow over it.

Mary Maguire, billed the "Mary Pickford of Australia" by guileless Antipodeans, apparently because she doesn't in the least resemble the blonde, long-curled ex-sweetheart of America, has signed with Warners.

Maguire, 17, brunette and sparkling-eyed, is a bigger star in Australia than the Southern Cross. Her last picture down under was "Flying Doctor" with Charles Farrell.

Burning because her rent was raised $150 a month, Barbara Stanwyck is shopping for a ranch home in the San Fernando Valley. Her brother hired her present Beverly Hills shanty under her real name, (Ruby Stevens) and when landlords discovered they had a film star for a tenant they boosted the ante with a bang.

George (Robust) Raft is due to have company at the world series. Wesley Ruggles, Roscoe Karnes and William Lebaron are all set to join him in a covey.

Stories About the Pictures You're Seeing.

Hollywood, Sept. 20.

FRED MACMURRAY.

This flicker, with a great title, was made by Paramount on a Class B budget, meaning they weren't going to spend much on production and cast, and thus stand a better chance of getting their money back. A big lure, they figured, was the sentimental value of the names of the former movie favorites.

There are many former marquee names in "Hollywood Boulevard," but a plan should have been worked out to identify the players for the audiences. Example: How many fans will know that the actor sitting next to Jack Mulhall at the Trocadero bar is Creighton Hale, who was the leading man for Pearl White in her serial, "The Perils of Pauline?"

There are many "favorites" in this picture whose value is lost because the audience isn't introduced to them.

* * * *

The picture was directed by Robert Florey, an excellent director who is never given a chance with an excellent scenario. His specialty is shooting a scene from an unusual angle. It is known about the studios that if you walk on a set and see a camera on the floor, Florey is shooting a scene.

Until the love story dominates the picture, there is much interest and color to "Hollywood Boulevard," proving that Hollywood is a good subject for pictures. In fact, one of the better lines in the picture concerns a truth about the cinema city, when Marsha Hunt tells her scenario-writer boy friend: "You're going to stay in Hollywood just as long as it wants you—and then longer."

* * * *

* * * *

The credit slide tells you that the picture is from a story by King Vidor and Elizabeth Hill. She is Betty Hill, long Vidor's girl friend. Miss Hill is more than script girl on the set. She rehearses scenes for Director Vidor while he is arranging setups, especially coaching the leading lady of the picture, who in this instance is Jean Parker.

* * * *

Vidor is Charlie Chaplin's best friend, and a quartet which can be seen at the Brown Derby or Sardi's is Chaplin and Goddard, Vidor and Hill. Chaplin went to the preview of the picture and made it evident that he enjoyed it.

About The Showshops

(With Gerald G. Gross, Batting for Nelson B. Bell)

BECAUSE receipts at movie box offices is rather a decent gauge of economic conditions and because the high quality, for the most part, of Hollywood's chief export deserves financial success, it's nice to pick up the latest issue of Motion Picture Herald and learn that a dozen or more films are leaving broken records in their wake.

Among the releases which have piled up splendid grosses in the first half of September are "Girls Dormitory," "Sing, Baby, Sing," "The Gorgeous Hussy" and "The Last of the Mohicans," all of which have played downtown Washington and are now in the neighborhoods; "Swing Time," "The General Died at Dawn," "Nine Days a Queen" and "Anthony Adverse," which are being shown here currently, and "Ramona," "The Texas Rangers," "His Brother's Wife," "My Man Godfrey" and "The Great Ziegfeld," scheduled for early exhibition. The last named attraction was seen at the National several months ago as a two-a-day road-show presentation but it is yet to be available in Washington at popular prices.

"Ramona," which Twentieth Century-Fox has made in color, broke opening-day records at the Alvin Theater, Pittsburgh, on its Labor Day world premiere. "Swing Time" did better business in Radio City Music Hall over the Labor Day week-end than the same stars' "Top Hat," previous record holder. The same Astaire-Rogers vehicle also smashed marks in Philadelphia, Reading, Cincinnati, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Baltimore and right here in our own RKO-Keith's.

"The General Died at Dawn" sold 75,000 tickets at New York's Paramount over the holiday week-end and it is topping earlier attendance records from coast to coast. "Nine Days a Queen" did exceptional business in Pittsburgh and if it doesn't do correspondingly well at the Earle this week many a moviegoer is denying himself an experience that opportunity seldom offers.

Arthur de Titta (Fox Movietone) and Anthony Muto (Will Hayes' representative in the Capital) were hosts last night to one of the finest troupers that ever dabbled in grease paint—Henry Armetta. Week-ending in Washington for the exclusive purpose of seeing our Capitol, Smithsonian and other sights, the Italian comedian with the mincing walk, was honored with a dinner at the Muto residence in Belle Haven, Va., arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Muto and Mr. and Mrs. de Titta.

Forced by this desk's exigencies to decline reluctantly an invitation to attend the reunion of Mr. Armetta with his two old cronies, we take consolation in the delightful telephone conversation we had with the welcome visitor.

In reply to our questions, the week-end sightseer said George Jessel is writing a screen play tentatively called "Music in the Park" which will star Mr. Armetta; Mrs. Armetta thinks Washington is the "finest place on earth;" he's due back in California next Thursday; the Bureau of Engraving and Printing certainly has lots of money, and he hopes to return here many more times.

This is his third trip here. First time was a quarter-century ago as a member of "The Littlest Rebel" company that played the National. The stars were William and Dustin Farnum and a child in the title role named Juliet Shelby. She became famous on the screen some years later as Mary Miles Minter.

Not until slightly more than a year ago did Mr. Armetta make his second visit. But that was a personal appearance tour and he had no time for Washington Monument and the Library of Congress. So he is enjoying this third stay most of all.

Last-minute announcements to this department reveal "The House of Rothschild" will be yanked from the Belasco tonight and "The Great Ziegfeld" will follow "The General Died at Dawn" into the Palace instead of "His Brother's Wife."

"Friday the Thirteenth," starring England's Jessie Matthews, will be introduced at the Belasco with another of those bargain previews, folks attending the final showing of the George Arliss revival being permitted to sit tight for Miss Matthews' brilliant dancing at no extra cost. It seems the Rothschild brothers, who were to have remained in Lafayette Square until Saturday, have laid an egg, even if the picture is one of the greatest talkies ever made.

The Belasco's incoming attraction, according to a telegram from Manager Thoman, is packed with romance, tragedy, comedy and drama and "what has been considered some of her (Jessie's) finest terpsichorean endeavors."

The Palace management, with respect to "The Great Ziegfeld," would have you know this picture has not been cut, that every foot of film that was shown in its reserved-seat stay at the National will be back at popular prices. The stars, if a reminder is necessary, include William Powell, Myrna Loy, Louise Rainer, Frank Morgan, Fanny Brice, Virginia Bruce, Ray Bolger and Harriet Hoctor.

Loew's Capitol has concluded arrangements for a novel and practical stunt. Here is the dope, as explained by Ray Bell:

Tune in (WJSV at 8 p. m.) on Maj. Bowes' amateur program Thursday. If there is one performer on the broadcast whom you would like, more than any other, to be included in the major's unit which will be the vaudeville portion of the Capitol's next bill, telephone District 6110 right after the air show and cast a vote for your favorite.

The "amateur" receiving the largest number of Washington telephone votes will positively appear at the Capitol when the Bowes unit comes in on the following day. A battery of telephones and operators will be assembled Thursday night in the theater's lower lobby to handle the calls.

Louise Noonan Miller and A. L. Tolkins have dispatched invitations to the city's bigwigs for the Rialto's opening Saturday night with a revival of "Grand Hotel." The District Commissioners, judiciary, department heads, club leaders and others have been requested to be the sponsors' guests at the premiere. A limited number of tickets will be placed on sale at the box office. Regular showings of the film, which lights up the Ninth street theater once again, will begin at 2 p. m. Sunday.

"RED RHYTHM." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 27 scenes, featuring Louise Stewart and Billy Mack, supported by Harry Seymour, Jimmie Francis, jr., Sid Stone, Condo and Allen, Margie Bartelle, Jean Wade, Agnes Nichols, Ruth Kaye, and the Dancing Bryanettes. Produced by Frank Bryant. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

If one needs an example of shows going from good to better, and then to better yet, the 1936-37 season of the Independent Burlesque Association thus far is, indeed, that example. Three fine shows have come and gone, and currently on view is the fourth, a show which in every way is equal to any of its predecessors and comes dangerously close to being the wheel's finest ever.

Coming to Washington after some five years of wowing Western and Midwestern audiences in Billy (Bumps) Mack, a zany, who looks and acts and works something on the order of George Broadhurst, with a touch of the Bozo Snyder finesse, added for good measure, yet the while having that indefinable something which is particularly his own. Working a good part in pantomime, Mr. Mack, with the able assistance of Sid Stone, straightman, adds a sprightliness to the program which is due to more than mere exuberance of performance. He clicks from the moment he comes on, continues throughout his scenes, and exits while the cash customers endeavor to regain a modicum of composure.

Mr. Mack is not all, however, for when Harry Seymour is also on the program, one knows that the show will be long on comedy. Mr. Seymour, working with Jimmie Francis, jr., contributed plenty of lusty, laff-packed gags.

"Red Rythm" is also a girl show, with Louise Stewart and Jean Wade—actually show stoppers both of them—topping the roster. They work in top form, each in her own individual manner, giving the patrons more than full value received. Agnes Nichols works the scenes, and Ruth Kaye warbles sweetly and frequently.

Especial mention is due the exquisite solo-dance work of Margie Bartelle, who, with the Dancing Bryanettes (good looking and accomplished) furnishing the terpsichorean accompaniment, gives a series of routines as graceful and difficult as one would care to see upon any stage. The team of Condo & Allen offers several tap routines that are fast and well done.

FEATURE STORY.

Elder Michaud, the radio preacher who broadcasts from Baltimore, is visiting New York and was introduced to the city's most prominent newlyweds. . . . "Ah can tell this weddin' is for keeps," he told them, "cause it takes wicked selfishness of the debbil in both parties to separate what God has put together. Neider of you has dat, Ah can see." . . . The happy honeymooners were Henry Fonda, who was divorced from Margaret Sullivan, and the ex-Mrs. George T. Brokaw.

OBITUARY.

Lenore Selsby, who now is appearing in the "Dodsworth" revival, also interviews the Broadway folk for the McNaught Syndicate. A few weeks ago she wrote to Adele Blood Hope and suggested that a mention in the papers might be of help in Mrs. Hope's plans for a stage comeback . . . "Publicity would help," was the reply. "We shall be in our studio apartment in New York about the 25th. In the meantime, we are at our home at Rye—Westchester Country Club Grounds." . . . Miss Selsby received this letter September 13—the same day on which the front pages reported the suicide of Adele Blood Hope. . . .

WAR NEWS.

In a newspaper interview yesterday, Joan Marsh told the world: "Movie stardom and a Radio Program mean so little. I'd give them both up when the right man comes along." . . . Miss Marsh will have less to give up next Saturday. Her program goes off the air then.

POLITICS.

Judge Lester Patterson told this last night to Saul Streit, who won the nomination for a General Sessions Court judgeship this week: On the first day Patterson was elevated to the bench, he arrived at the courthouse and watched a path cleared for him, saw passengers removed from the elevator, so that he could ride it alone, and then watched court hangers-on pushed out of the way to his chambers. When he entered the court room, the audience rose, until he was seated, and then rose again at the end of the day. The rigid ceremonies were repeated until he reached his chambers, down the elevator and back to his home. . . . There he removed his coat, stretched out in his easy chair and called to his wife: "Get me the newspaper, huh?" . . . "Get it yourself," Mrs. Patterson replied. "Whoinhell d'you think you are anyway?"

CHAPTER XXI.

Mal Impatient.

Mal's talents at waiting were as poor as they were impatient. So he tried all the harder to dig up his desires along with the earth in the garden; to plant his rapidly growing hopes together with the stunted cedars and moss in the Japanese dream he was creating; and to spur his flagging will as he spurred his horse on long rides over the hills.

Ellen was the one who gave herself up whole-heartedly to dreams. She called as often as she dared, and she knew how to make herself amusing. She showered Mal with funny little gifts and notes, sugary with sympathy over something unhappy about him which she vaguely sensed but didn't understand.

The gifts and notes often made him laugh, even while he felt uneasy. He had all he could handle, so he told himself, without having to deal with the infatuation of such an attractive child as Ellen. Infatuation for Grimwold's puppet glamour, he called it, and tried his best to nip it in the bud with an exaggerated banter as elderly as he could make it in tone.

But everything played against him. His banter only made him seem more charming and gallant in the eyes of the two young women interested in him. And spring completely upset his spartan program by insidious onslaughts upon cool, calculating judgment. As it steadily advanced with tempestuous rains, altered by gorgeous sunny days of wide, cloud-fleeced skies, and flowering trees and lush green hills, golden with mustard, it started hearts to yearning as surely as it started sap to flow.

Pam, who had decided to let well enough alone, was at last bowled over by it. She felt something in Mal crying to be spoken, but being forcibly held back. She could stand this surcharged, throttled atmoshpere no longer.

"Let's go somewhere!" she broke out one morning at breakfast. "It's such a lovely day."

"Yes, it is," Mal agreed, and looked into Pamella's face as if he found the day there.

"I'd rather like to go," David startled Pam by saying, "if I can take Ellen."

Pam's look of disappointment caused Mal considerable difficulty in hiding and controlling his delight. But, no. At all costs, he must avoid the dangers which a day spent somewhere alone with her would put upon his will.

"Why, certainly, David. Ask Ellen," he said quickly. "Where would you like to go, Pamella?"

To the desert, Pam thought. The flowers would be coming out, and the fruit trees in blossom.

"Pam's been crazy for a spree at La Quinta, but none of her boy friends has the price," David said.

Car Speeds Up Valley.

La Quinta, then it should be if they'd give him the pleasure of taking them as his guests. Though on a Saturday—Mal hesitated and cast an anxious glance at Pam—there'd probably be a crowd. "David, will you phone my invitation to Ellen, while I get the car ready?"

As David rushed off to phone, Pam murmured: "I had thought you and I might go alone together, Mal, in my car."

"Say that again, Pamella . . . No—no. Just those words, "you and I. . . . I wish we might have gone alone together. But I'm afraid we can't get rid of our tribes quite yet, Pamella. . . . "

Mal's big car sped up the valley, along boulevards flanked by fruit-laden orange groves and pinkly budding live oaks; past stretches of wild land, dotted with clumps of sycamores, faintly pricked in green, and with thickets of blossoming buckhorn, billowing over the hills in a cloud of pale mauve from the smears of dusky golden daisies on the sand between.

Ito drove the car, and Mal, with a certain circumspection, sat beside him on the front seat. He was anxious that David should thoroughly enjoy the day and he knew this would be achieved if the boy had Ellen quite to himself. Then by sittnig sidewise, Mal could join in the rear seat conversation and have at all times a clear view of Pam's face.

Two of his guests were unusually quiet. Pam seemed content to ride along and enjoy the fresh spring country and to smile her delight at him whenever he could catch her eye. Ellen, strangely pensive and, it must be confessed, just a little him that she was only letting David hold her hand to keep this boy from becoming a greater nuisance.

"Mr. Mallard . . . "

At last, David leaned over and gave Mal a poke.

"Wake up when a lady speaks to you. The scenery will keep."

Mal Sounds Name.

"I was only going to tell you," said Ellen [what was it about him that made you long to help him, even though he left you afraid to make the attempt?] "that if you think this country pretty, you ought to see New England in apple blossom time."

"I would like that."

Pam suggested that they take a whiff of the almond blossoms. Between the rugged bases of the snow-crowned peaks, the almond orchards were spread. Miles upon miles of them, their gray, rough branches ruddily white and shaggy with blossoms. They filled the air with honeyed fragrance.

"It's about time for your poetic friend to begin spouting that Browning piffle about all being right with the world——"

"It certainly is for you, David, so don't sneer at it," Mal again startled David. "Young, sound, all your life before you, unhampered by devastating mistakes. What more could a man ask! Don't you think God's in his heaven on a day like this, Ellen?"

And Ellen whispered, "Oh, yes!"

Without doubt, it was a perfect spring day on the desert—warm, still and balmy. The Mallard car swept through the busy stir of Palm Springs. It passed the outlying date farms of Indio, and it stopped at last in the rear quadrangle of La Quinta—that white and rusty-tiled oasis,set alone with its low-roofed hotel, its Spanish cottages named for the saints, its green lawns, fountains and walled gardens in the very center of the desert's heart.

Mal led his party out through the arcaded loggia beyond which stretched a carefully nurtured lawn of an acre or so. It made an enchanting green vista for the eye to pass over before encountering the stark and limitless spectacle of the unclaimed desert.

In one of the sunny archways, Mal was stopped by a beaming and very tanned young woman, wearing shorts and a jade-green pullover.

"Oh, Mr. Mallard, won't you please autograph my book?" And she held out a copy of Clatworthy's play.

Mal bowed and scrawled his name on the flyleaf.

"I think," he said, pushing on with his guests, "that we'd have a pleasanter time if I took a cottage and had luncheon served on its little porch."

"Oh, can't we have it here in this perfectly adorable open air dining room?" Ellen objected.

"Why, certainly, if you'd like it better."

"Oh, but that will be fun!" Ellen exclaimed.

David sniffed.

"Want to flaunt the great lover before the other maidens?"

Culbertson On Bridge

RESPONDING TO A TAKEOUT DOUBLE.

If, after your partner makes a takeout double, the next opponent bids, you are relieved of the obligation to take out the double. If you make a response in this position you show at least one honor trick and a biddable suit for one-half honor trick and a six-card major suit.

For example, your partner doubled an opening one spade bid and the next opponent bid two diamonds. Your hand is:

♠ 6 3 ♥ K 10 6 5 3 2 ♦ 7 4 ♣ 8 6 3

You should now bid two hearts (six-card suit and one-half honor trick).

When, after your partner's double, the next opponent has redoubled, you respond as though the redouble had not occurred.

If you pass, it is a penalty pass. You cannot pass a redoubled no trump unless you have the 1½ honor tricks with which you would have passed in any case. To pass a redouble of a suit bid, you must have about two honor tricks and some strength (J 10 x or x x x x) in the opposing suit.

Lacking these requirements, you make your normal takeout with a weak hand, and a strength showing response with a strong hand. For example, your partner doubled an opening spade bid and the next opponent redoubled. Your hand is:

♠ 7 5 3 2 ♥ 6 4 ♦ 8 6 3 2 ♣ 7 5 4 3

You must now bid two clubs.

The Simplicity of the Squeeze.

I have had many requests for elementary instruction on squeeze plays. Therefore I have "stacked" the hand shown below to illustrate this type of coup in its simplest and most easily understandable form, and at the same time to show the correct defense in similar, typical situations.

North, dealer.

	NORTH
	♥ 7 6 5 4
	♦ 4 3 2
WEST		EAST
♠ K Q 9 7		♠ 10 8 6 5
♥ A K Q		♥ J 10 9 3
♦ K Q J 9		♦ 8 7 6 5
	SOUTH
	♣ A K Q J 10 9 8 7

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	5 clubs	Double
Pass	Pass	Pass

West opens the king of hearts and continues with the queen and ace. Declarer ruffs the third lead and sees that apparently he must lose a diamond trick in addition to the two tricks already lost. There is, however, one chance, and that depends on an extraordinarily favorable lay of cards. He runs off every trump except one. Now, note what the lead of the last trump does to West. He must blank one of his kings. If he chooses to blank the spade king, dummy's ace and jack become good; if the diamond king (he already had to let go the diamond jack), declarer's ace and ten of diamonds will win. Thus, declarer is assured of three tricks in addition to his eight card trump suit—victory!

Now for the defense side of the picture. West must realize that declarer has a long trump suit. The one danger that West runs of losing some of his high-card tricks is through a squeeze play. But such a play requires entries in both dummy's and declarer's hand and, moreover, entries that can be used at the proper time! The best way to destroy a squeeze is to destroy one of these vital entries, thus cutting off communications.

Developing this theme, it must be noted that dummy has only one entry, the spade ace, while declarer has many, his trumps being entries in themselves. Therefore West cannot isolate declarer's hand, and should not try; there is no point in shifting to the diamond king after one or two heart leads. But dummy can be so isolated by knocking out its one entry card, hence the crying need for a prompt shift to the spade king. With that shift, dummy's hand becomes null and void, the squeeze dies aborning, and the contract will be defeated.

Lewis Hits 2 Homers in First as Hurler Gives but 7 Safeties.

Gomez Yields Only Two Blows in Finale as Bluege Stars.

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Sept. 20.—New visions of finishing in second place, conjured by the Nats as they thumped out a 6-1 victory over the Yankees in the first game of a double-header today, were rudely dissipated in the second game when Lefty Gomez surrendered only two hits to the Washington Club.

The Yanks won that second game, 3 to 2, thanks to Gomez and a streak of incurable wildness developed by Buck Newsom in the early innings when three of the ten walks parceled out by Blustering Buck figured in all of the Yankees' runs.

But the day was not a total loss to the Nats, who, while watching second place move 2½ games distant, gained ground on the third-place Chicago White Sox. A double defeat of the White Sox by the Browns at St. Louis reduced the Chicago team's third-place margin over the Nats to a mere half game.

Whitehill Does Good Job.

Earl Whitehill did a clever job of pitching the Nats to victory in that first game. The venerable southpaw allowed the Yankees only seven hits, and was cheated of a shutout triumph only when Jake Powell, his former teammate, banged a home run into the left-field bleachers in the fourth inning. Two home runs by Buddy Lewis featured the Nats 11-hit attack against Charley Ruffing.

But in that second game, Gomez, who had been a ne'er-do-well sort all season, virtually pitched himself into a starting role in the coming World Series by his impressive two-hit performance. The 20,000 fans, recognizing Gomez's apparent comeback, cheered him wildly.

Ossie Bluege's single in the fourth inning, which produced the Nats' only two runs of the game, was the first hit permitted by Gomez. Ben Chapman authored the only other one, a single to center with one out in the fifth. Thereafter, Gomez was invincible.

3 Walks Make Run.

The Yanks translated the first of the ten walks Newsom issued into a 1-0 lead in the first inning. After Crosetti, the first man to face Buck, had been given a free ticket to first, Rolfe singled past Kress and DiMaggio crashed a single off Newsom's leg to fill the bases. Gehrig's long fly to Chapman brought the run home but Powell hit into a double play to halt the rally.

The Yanks bounced right back in the second with great encouragement from Newsom and made at 3-0. Newsom walked Saltzgaver and then pitched a single to Gomez. With one out he walked Rolfe to fill the basses, and DiMaggio then singled to center to drive Saltzgaver and Gomez home.

Despite his wildness, Newsom re-

Tigers Win, 5-3, Sweep Series With Tribe

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 20.—The Detroit Tigers rallied in the eighth inning to scalp the Cleveland Indians, 5 to 3, and make a clean sweep of their four-game series.

The Tigers' 3 runs in that inning drove Al Milnar, recruit left-hander, from the mound. He was charged with the loss and Roxie Lawson, who hurled the last two innings for Detroit, received credit for the victory. The Indians got ten hits, the Tigers five.

Gerald Walker led off in the eighth with a single. Then Milnar took Jack Burns' bounder and threw to centerfield, allowing Walker to reach third. A single by Charley Gehringer scored Walker and tied up the game. Pete Fox sacrificed the runners along and Al Simmons scored Burns and Gehringer with a single.

Redskins Beat Eagle Eleven By 26 to 3

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 20.—The Boston Redskins scored in every period today to roll up a 26-to-3 conquest of the Philadelphia Eagles in a National Professional Football League game.

Displaying surprising strength against a team that conquered the champion New York Giants last week in the opener, the Redskins tallied with a field goal in the initial period, Riley Smith's 34-yard boot from placement splitting the uprights.

The Redskins forged ahead in the second period when battles climaxed a 72-yard march with a 6-yard off-tackle play for the first touchdown. In the third period battles circled wide around right end, got into the clear, and raced 66 yards for another.

32,000 Watch Cubs Defeat Dean, 4-3

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Chicago's Cubs caught up with Dizzy Dean in the eighth inning today to conquer the St. Louis Cardinals, 4 to 3, and moved ahead once more in their argument over second place in the National League, before 32,342 spectators at Wrigley Field.

The Cubs, who took over second place by winning the series opener Friday, but gave it right back to Frankie Frisch's Gas House Gang yesterday, again moved into the runner-up spot today by assaulting the great Dizzy just when it appeared he had his twenty-fourth victory of the season in his pocket.

While the 1935 champions struggled upward a notch, the Cubs' second victory of the cut-throat series was of even greater benefit to the league-leading New York Giants, who again defeated Brooklyn. The Cubs remained six full games behind the heirs apparent to the 1936 title, with the Cardinals another game farther back.

Until the eighth inning when Dean suddenly lost his effectiveness, he had allowed only four hits. His adversary and conqueror, Bill Lee, had done even better in the matter of hits, having yielded only two singles. Dean, however, went into the big inning with a 1-to-0 lead, gained in the second inning when a walk to Johnny Mize, Leo Durocher's single and a bit of cub double play strategy that went amiss, produced a run.

From there on until the ninth, Lee permitted only two men to reach first, and both were mopped up in double plays. The Cubs gave Ol' Diz trouble by loading the bases in the fourth and clipping him for hits in the three innings, but he turned on the strikeout ball in the pinches.

Ettore Says He'll Knock Out Louis

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 20.—Al Ettore, Philadelphia's potential stumbling block for the fearsome Joe Louis, voiced a nice disregard for betting odds and the Brown Bomber's record today as he wound up his training and snorted, "I'll knock him out."

While workers at the Municipal Stadium prepared for a crowd of 50,000 to see the 15-round battle Tuesday night, just a day short of ten years since Gentleman Gene Tunney cut down the Manassa Mauler, Jack Dempsey, in the same ring, both fighters tapered off in their New Jersey training camp.

Co-Promoter Herman Taylor, gleefully expectant of a gilt-edged revival of local boxing interest which has lagged since "the battle of the rain" in 1926, figured a $200,000 "take."

The boys on the street say so, currently at 3 to 1. Louis' record—24 knockouts, 4 decisions, and 1 defeat in 29 professional engagements—seconds it.

His battered sparring partners disagree only on the round. As Joe Banovic, one of them, said, "He's hitting better than he ever did in his life. He's the Louis of a year ago."

Ettore has tagged the knockout punch on 18 opponents, outpointed 37, was held to two draws, lost six decisions, and knocked out once, by Charley Retzlaff in January, 1935, in two rounds. He'll be answering the bell for the sixty-fifth time in his professional career.

Louis, flattened in 12 rounds by Max Schmeling in June after a "reign of terror" that built him up as "invincible," saw action last in August, when he battered the comeback hopes of Jack Sharkey in three rounds.

U. S. Poloists Absorb 21-9 Drubbing

35,000 Watch Invaders Ride Rings Around 10-Goal Hitchcock.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Westbury, N. Y., Sept. 20.—Rolling up a record score for international polo competition, Argentina's Olympic championship team routed the great Tommy Hitchcock and his Greentree mates, representing the United States in defense of the cup of the Americas, 21 to 9, today in the first match of the series at the Meadow Brook Club.

Finishing in the rain before a crowd of 35,000 spectators, the biggest crowd of the polo season, the "Galloping Gauchos" ran wild in the second half after the rival teams played each other to a standstill in the first four periods.

Simultaneously with the first pattering of raindrops the Argentines got the scoring range and turned the match into the worst rout ever seen on historic International Field. Led by the veteran Manuel Andrada and the brilliant young Roberto Cavanagh, the invaders turned on a scoring blast that gave them 13 goals in the last four chukkers, while holding the United States open champions to a single tally, a free hit by Hitchcock near the close of the match.

Cavanagh, playing opposite Hitchcock, not only rode rings around the world's only ten-goal player with a dazzling exhibition of shotmaking and horsemanship, but led the scorers with eight goals. Hitchcock tallied only three times, twice from the four line, and was outplayed and outclassed in the second half by the Argentine No. 2.

Under the second-half pressure of an attack that rarely lost its continuity and goal-shooting that was astonishing in its accuracy, the United States combination's defense went to pieces. Not even the most strenuous efforts of Hitchcock or his nine-goal teammate, Gerald Balding, could check the rush of the four horsemen from the Argentine, whose all-around play at the finish was reminiscent of performances by this country's "big four" in its palmiest days.

The Argentines started as favorites, but not even their most enthusiastic followers anticipated so overwhelming a triumph. The shock to the home team's backers was all the more pronounced because of Hitchcock's failure to rally the team he had led to triumph in this year's Open Championship for the second year.

First Loss in 3 Years.

The setback marked the first time in eight years that a Hitchcock-led four has been beaten in international competition. An Argentine team, in 1928, was the last to achieve that distinction.

Based on today's outcome, it is likely the United States will shake-up its lineup for the second match

Boils May Send Card Star to Infirmary

An attack of boils threatens to send Irish Carroll, stellar Catholic University gridiron performer, to the infirmary. The boils broke out on the Cardinal star's legs Saturday morning, but Carroll refused to report his condition to Coach Dutch Bergman, wearing stockings in drills and scrimmage to conceal the outbreak.

The tough training grind Saturday aggravated the skin eruptions and late Saturday nigh Carroll was forced to report his condition.

Because several members of the Catholic University squad were banged up in the scrimmage between the Blues and Whites Saturday, Coach Bergman plans to hold only light workouts today.

Among those nursing bad bruises are Fred Rogers, Johnny Carvelas, sophomore candidate from Eastern High School; Bill Dempsey and Charley Munhall. Carvelas received a bad kick in the face which necessitated his being sent to the hospital. He will be absent from the line-up indefinitely.

Driver, 4 in Crowd Hurt at Speedway

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—One driver and four spectators were injured today in the program of auto races at Roby Speedway, the feature event of which was won by Rex Mays, of Glendale, Calif.

George Connors, of Los Angeles, the injured driver, was thrown from his racer near the finish of the feature event, one of 50 miles. Connors, thinking he had won third place, slowed down, but stepped quickly on the gas as he saw Frank Brisko, of Milwaukee, drawing up. The sudden acceleration sent Connor's car spinning into an infield post.

Duke Nalon, of Chicago, lost a wheel in front of the grandstand, packed with 15,000 spectators. It rolled down the track and into packed bleachers. Al Tatina, Chicago, suffered a fractured hip when the wheel struck him and Miss Ellen Trusch, Miss Mae Vine and Carl Richardson, all of Chicago, were slightly bruised attempting to get out of the wheel's path.

6 Intersectional Tilts Top Week's Schedule

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—The football season gets down to serious business this week, a bit earlier than usual, after hoisting the curtain with a double handful of games yesterday and Friday night.

The greater part of the program, which will bring most of the major teams in every section of the country into action, consists of the customary early-season "warm-up" clashes, but there are a half dozen or so that would rate as major contests on any Saturday.

High spotting the program are the intersectional clashes between Colgate and Duke at Durham, N. C., Minnesota and Washington at Seattle, and Louisiana State and Rice at Baton Rouge, La. The Southern colleges, which did most of last week's playing, begin their conference schedules in earnest, with Mississippi taking on Tulane in the Southeastern group and South Carolina meeting Virginia Military, and Clemson facing Virginia Tech in the Southern Four of the teams in the major intersectional clashes will be opening their campaigns in the grand manner while two, Duke and Rice, warmed up Saturday. Duke's Blue Devils overcame stubborn resistance by a new Southern Conference member to defeat Davidson 13-0, while the Rice Owls whipped Texas A. & M., 33-0.

Yesterday's other leading games saw Mississippi trounce University, 45-0; Kentucky rout Maryville, 54-3; South Carolina trim Erskine, 38-0; V. M. I and Clemson roll up 19-0 against Wofford and Presbyterian, respectively, V. P. I. beat Roanoke, 16-7; North Carolina State downed Elon, 12-0, and West Virginia, the only big Eastern team in action, overcame Waynesburg, 7-0.

The week's program opens tomorrow night with two games postponed from last Friday, Temple vs. St. Joseph and Richmond vs. the Newport News Apprentice School. Temple's Owls play again Friday night against Centre.

Other Friday games include Duquesne-Waynesburg, George Washington-Emory and Henry, Xavier (Cincinnati)-Kentucky, Auburn-Birmingham Southern and Denver-Colrado Mines.

Some of the Saturday contests which may turn out to be bright spots, although they don't figure to give the big teams any great amount of trouble, include Navy-William and Mary, Pittsburgh-Ohio Wesleyan, Georgia-Mercer, North Carolina State-Davidson, Stanford-Santa Clara, Southern California-Oregon State, Texas Chrsitian-Texas Tech. On Sunday St. Mary's of California tops off the shcedule by meeting Gonzaga.

Fight on Stymie Clouds Win of Fischer

By the Associated Press.

Garden City, N. Y., Sept. 20.—Johnny Fischer's magnificent rush to victory over Jack McLean, of Scotland, in the national amateur golf championship was clouded today by another heated controversy over the stymie.

Fischer defeated the Scotch finalist yesterday by squaring the match on the thirty-sixth hole and taking the extra hole by dropping a 20-foot putt for a birdie 3.

Pointing out that "Fischer's finish was the greatest I've ever seen" George Dunlap, national amateur champion himself in 1933, nevertheless declared that "the championship was decided on the thirty-fourth green by the stymie rule."

A Good Argument.

"There never was a better argument against the stymie than the result of that hole," Dunlap said. "McLean played three perfect shots and was a foot from the cup. Johnny hit his first putt 5 feet past and then hit a bad second putt which stopped on the lip of the cup dead in McLean's line. There was nothing McLean could do. He wasn't rewarded for hitting his three good shots and Johnny wasn't penalized for hitting a bad putt.

"McLean then played the bravest shot I've ever seen. He tried to pitch his ball over Fischer's when the chances were 95-5 that he'd either knock Johnny's ball into the cup, or leave himself a 4 or 5 foot putt coming back. As it was, he did have to sink a 4-footer to get a half, and believe me, 4 feet at that stage of the game looks like a mile."

Bobby Jones, who has had some experience with these things, admitted after the tournament that "the stymie was a cruel break against McLean," but the Atlanan still believes in the stymie rule.

Both Shaken By Storm.

Hector Thomson, the British amateur champion, who followed his buddy, McLean every step of the way in Saturday's final, thought the real crisis of the match came on the seventh hole of the afternoon round when McLean missed a 3-foot putt.

"That miss shook him," Thomson said. "He tightened up from there on and three-putted the tenth, eleventh and thirteenth I think that's what beat him."

But in summarizing the play of the two finalists, two things were evident: (1) That both were shaken by the tremendous beating they took in the storm during the semi-final round; (2) That Fischer was obviously playing under a great handicap with his injured left ankle. Then, as McLean pointed out, "Johnny deserved to win when he finished with three birdies and I deserved to lose for putting the way I did in the middle of the last round."

Fischer was in Boston today and will leave tomorrow for Cincinnati. He must start in his third year in law school at the University of Cincinnati next week.

Fischer's Finish Gallant.

McLean will not sail with the other British Walker Cup players Wednesday, but will stay over until October 7, when he and Thomson will go home aboard the Queen Mary.

Despite all opinion and controversy about the first part of the final, Fischer's glorious finish stands out not only as the outstanding exhibition of this tournament, but as one of the most dramatic chapters

Giants Blank Dodgers, 5-0; Near Title

15,800 See Terrymen Dissipate Brooklyn's Erstwhile Jinx.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Sept. 20.—The New York Giants continued their rush toward the National League pennant today and made a complete killing of their Brooklyn jinx by trouncing the Dodgers 5 to 0, with Fat Freddy Fitzsimmons pitching his first shutout of the year.

The victory gave the Giants a sweep of the three-game series and their seventh straight win over their erstwhile hard-luck "cousins," and apparently made their chances of clinching the pennant a matter of only three or four days.

Fitz let the Dodgers down with half a dozen hits, and not a man reached third base. The Giants, meantime, belted Max Butcher, Brooklyn starter, out in less than two innings, had tough going against Ed Brandt until the ninth, and then scored their last run off George Jeffcoat in the final frame. Butcher was charged with the defeat.

15,800 See Game.

The winning run came in the first inning when Jojo Moore singled and got around on a pass, Jim Ripple's single and Bill Terry's fly. The rest of the scoring was superfluous.

In the second, singles by Burgess Whitehead and Dick Bartell and a double by Fitzsimmons brought two more runs in. Gus Mancuso scored another run in the seventh on his single, Whitehead's double and Moore's fly, and then completed the Giant scoring with a homer off Jeffcoat in the ninth.

Threatening weather held the crowd down, but 15,848 turned out, nevertheless.

Cincinnati Plans To Fete Fischer For Golf Triumph

Cincinnati, Sept. 20 (AP).—Cincinnati launched plans today for a "tickertape" parade and reception honoring Johnny Fischer in bringing home the United States amateur golf championship, which he won yesterday at Garden City, N. Y.

A committee headed by Mayor Russell Wilson plans to meet the 24-year-old law student when he returns Wednesday and escort him at the head of the parade.

"Our Fischer has been angling for big-time golfing honors for some time," boasted Wilson. "He's been our hope, and we are supremely gratified by his success."

"This much is sure," Frank said, "we are going to ask all civic organizations, drum corps and bands to join us. A number already have asked us what they could do. We're going to have a reception; Johnny will get the 'keys to the city,' and we will have a civic dinner in his honor.

"Then on October 10, all the golf clubs of the city will join in a 'Fischer Day' celebration."

80 Women Seek 31 Qualifying Spots in Post Trophy Golf Today

Limit Is Set On Handicap At 18

Low Net Scores to Be the Basis for Awarding Qualifying Spots.

Washington's most important women's tournament outside of the District championship will open this morning at Kenwood Golf and Country Club's course, where a field of close to 80 will battle for 31 qualifying places in the match play handicap tournament for The Washington Post Trophy.

First off the tee at 8:30 will be a threesome composed of 18-year-old Marion Brown, of Manor, one of the favorites to win the medal; Betty Keeler, of Indian Spring and Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, of Congressional.

The qualifying places will be determined on a low net basis, with 18 the handicap limit.

Actually 32 will begin the match play grind with seven-eighths handicap allowance tomorrow morning, for Miss Louise Claytor, of Chevy Chase, defending champion, is an automotic qualifier.

Host Club Musters Strength.

Determined to make a good showing, the host club has mustered its best players for The Post show. Virginia Pope, who has cracked 40 dozens of times on each nine at Kenwood, will be one of the favorites for the crown, despite a low handicap. Another strong challenger will be Gloria Rogers, stepdaughter of Wiffy Cox, Kenwood professional.

Teeing off at 9:40 will be Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, wife of the Congressional pro, 1934 champion, who plays with her mother, Mrs. Agnes Bowden, and Mrs. Charlotte Stern, of Army and Navy, who looms as a dangerous contender for Miss Claytor's crown. Mrs. Frank Keefer, of Chevy Chase, former president of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association, and Mrs. Howard Simons, of Manor, are to play at 10:15.

Post entries will be accepted. Contestants may bring their own caddies. There will be five rounds of match play, winding up Saturday morning with an 18-hole match.

of the cup series, scheduled Wednesday. Two of America's young stars, Stewart Iglehart and Winston Guest, are available as substitutes, in the event it is decided to replace either the featherweight Georg H. (Pete) Bostwick at No. 1, or the Greentree Captain John Hay (Jock) Whitney, at back.

Bostwick started off at a sensational clip, scoring five goals in the first half. The diminutive gentleman steeplechase jockey poked through three goals in the second chukker during a rally that gave the United States a 5-2 lead. At that point the Argentines were being decisively outplayed but they came back to tie the score in the third period, hold their rivals all even in a free-scoring fourth chukker, and then romp off by themselves.

Argentinian Hits Plans to Sub Team

Buenos Aires, Sept. 20 (AP).—Reports that Greentree polo team might be shifted to introduce Stewart Iglehart and Winston Guest into its line-up after today's smashing defeat at the hands of the Argentine team in the cup of the Americas series brought objections tonight from Lieut. Col. Enrique Padilla, president of the Argentine Polo Association.

Padilla cabled Jack Nelson, captain of the Argentine team, felicitating him upon the victory and at the same time pointing out that "our arrangement is to play against the winners of the open championship and naturally its reserves, since in a contrary case it will be playing against an international American team, which is not what was agreed upon. Try to do what is possible that if the team is changed it is not bettered."

3 Quarterbacks On Colonial Team

George Washington will trot on the field against Emory and Henry next Friday night literally equipped with three quarterbacks. Of course, only one of them will start, but it is entirely possible that all three will be calling signals before the game ends.

Frank Kavalier, captain of the Colonial squad, is an excellent quarterback, having devoted his time to master-minding from the field before his recent shift to center.

The George Washington-Emory and Henry game will be the first grid contest in this vicinity this season. Emory and Henry was held to a scoreless tie by Randolph-Macon last Friday night at Emory, Va.

Ellett Is Elected D. C. Duckpin Unit Head

Greer Asks to Retire After Decade as President; Millner Is V. P.

Thirty league representatives attending the annual Washington City Duckpin Association meeting at the Raleigh Hotel yesterday afternoon unanimously elected Perce Ellett, one of the Capital's foremost bowlers, to succeed Harry Z. Greer, venerable bowling seer, who had served for more than a decade.

The retiring president asked to be relieved of his duties because of the illness of his wife and other pressing duties. But in recognition of his long service Greer was prevailed upon to accept the office of treasurer.

Wesley Miltner, former treasurer, was named vice president, a post Ellett held for several years. Arville Ebersole was again re-elected secretary, a job he has filled capably for over 10 years.

Charles O'Connell, Larry Fitzgerald, Dave Burrows, Harry Wolfe and Jack O'Connell were renamed on the executive committee.

Support of the National Duck Pin Bowling Congress was asked by George L. Isemann, secretary, who as a former president of the local organization played an important role in helping to mold the present strong set-up here.

McElvenny Pulls Out; Favorites Win in Fall Open Tennis Play

Marked by the withdrawal of Ralph McElvenny, one of the high seeded players, the annual Playground Department fall open tennis tournament finished its second day's play yesterday without further upset.

McElvenny, afflicted with severe blisthers on both feet as the result of the recent United States Government tournament in which he was forced to play five sets in the final round before losing to Tony Latona, decided to forego the singles play and defaulted to Spencer Howell, former George Washington University player.

The Security and Exchange Commission lawyer was favored by many to gain the semi-finals. He expected to defend the doubles championship he holds with Barney Welsh.

Rain forced postponment of most matches but several of the entrants decided to move the scene of action to Country Club courts and thus managed to play. Frank Shore, seeded No. 8, encountered a stubborn proposition in Strand Johnsen, before winning 5—7, 6—2, 9—7, and Hugh Lynch, seeded No. 3, behind Welsh and Gilbert Hunt, was taken to an extra set by Arthur Simmons before winning, 6—2, 5—7, 6—1.

Tony Latona, three-time Government champion, likewise lost a set, young Eugene Owens, of Western High, taking him to 4—6, 6—2, 6—0 before succumbing. Latona is seeded No. 5. Rickey Willis, another seeded entrant, barely managed to get past Allie Ritzenberg, 6—4, 8—7.

Hunt, virtually a 50-50 choice to take the title, meets Max Kay at Potomac Park today at 5 p. m. In other outstanding matches, Harold McGuffin, of Philadelphia, meets George Petticord at the same hour, and Ed Mather, seeded No. 6, faces Buddy Adair. Buddy Goeltz, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., will also see his first action today.

Entries for the doubles will close at 6 p. m. today on the Potomac Park courts. Play will start Tuesday afternoon.

Chicago Bears Beat Packers By 30 to 3

14,000 See Victors Turn on Power to Score Three Times in 2d Half.

By the Associated Press.

Green Bay, Wis., Sept. 20.—Holding a 10-to-3 advantage at the half, the Chicago Bears pounded over three touchdowns after the intermission for a top heavy victory over the Green Bay Packers here today, 30 to 3, in a National Professional Football League game.

More than 14,000 persons, the largest crowd ever to witness a football game in Green Bay, attended.

The Bears were given a stiff battle by Green Bay throughout the first half, but turned on the power in the last two periods when they plunged and passed their way to three touchdowns.

A pass from Nolting to Hewitt early in the third period and another from Molesworth to Brumbaugh in the fourth accounted for two Chicago scores, while Karr ran around left end from the 10-yard line for a third.

The Bears broke a 3-to-3 tie in the first half on a double lateral off a forward pass, Molesworth to Hewitt to Johnsos to Ronzani, to score from the Green Bay 30-yard line.

Schwammell, Green Bay tackle booted a 26-yard field goal early in the second period after Manders had placekicked the Bears' first point from the 36-yard line.

Heurich Drubs Shady Grove, 12-3, to Capture Section A Title

4,000 Watch Victors Belt 19 Hits

By John R. Vosburgh.

The Heurich Brewers stirred up a storm on their own account yesterday when threatening weather failed to produce one, wrecking the Shady Grove Barbecue ball club with 19 hits and a 12-3 defeat to win the Section A championship of the National City League.

Clearing up all doubt as to the strongest team in the circuit, the second-half champs knocked their nemesis of last week, Adger ("Giggles") Adair out of the box and continued to pound away on fat Frank aBroni for a dozen more hits. In the confusion, Huck Stahl, veteran Heurich shortstop, hit a homer with the bases full.

A crowd of some 4,000 fans refused to be intimidated by the dark clouds which threatened to douse finish to see slight, raw-boned them momentarily and stayed to the Walter James, Heurich curve-ball artist, turn in his seven-hit victory.

Umpire Is Hurt.

The game was also marked by a severe head injury sustained by one of the umpires hard-boiled looking Bus Bussius, and he wasn't hit with a pop-bottle. Knocky Thomas, Shady Grove catcher, was the culprit—unintentionally. In the sixth inning he lifted a fly to left and tossed his bat aside in some disgust, the stick cracked the umpire on the right side of the head and causing a rather bloody wound. Manager Bill Flester, of Heurich's, patched up the injury temporarily and play was resumed some 10 minutes later.

Stahl's homer came in the first frame with none out. Dick Knight had been walked by Adair; Otts Zahn had singled and Tommy Thompson had dumped a scratch hit to left when he drove a liner through the infield and took four bases on it when it took a bad hop and eluded Centerfielder Tommy Nolan.

Adair Chased.

Adair retired in the next inning after Fee Colliere singled and James sent him to second on a bunt. Knight grounded out, but Zahn singled, Thompson singled and Bennie doubled to give Baroni a warm greeting and the Brewers three runs.

Shady Grove scored all its runs in the third on three of its seven hits. Hilleary and Harding singled and Scott filled the bases on a walk. Tommy Nolan then tripled to left. Tommy Thompson, of the Brewers, clouted one of the longest drives in recent sandlot history in the eighth inning, a homer some 400 feet out in right-center field. The ball finally came to rest over on the West diamond close to the sidewalk. Both Thompson and Everett Russell connected for four hits, the latter having a perfect day at bat.

Havre de Grace, Sept. 20.

Dear Al:

I have had a kindly feeling for "Skeets" Holland, the colored jockey, ever since I saw him report one day at 116 pounds and the next day at 109 pounds because his lone mount was in at that weight. Even if you have not seen Holland ride in a race you perhaps have noticed the very dark fellow working out horses while standing in the saddle. They tell me that Holland often comes through the stretch singing and riding. Holland gets few chances to ride on the major tracks. Opening day he got a mount in More Pep. His instructions were "go out there and win." Holland won but the stewards said he bumped several horses in taking the purse. Holland was suspended for the remainder of the meeting. Just how the horse escaped being disqualified I do not know. If More Pep interfered with several horses as the stewards are quoted as having said, it looks as though his number should be taken down. Jockey Jackie Westrope may draw a suspension out of the same race. He was on Dunair and the stewards did not like the way he snatched up at one stage of the race. When the horse Sit Out tossed his jockey for the third time at the post in yesterday's last race, one of the boys in the pressbox yelled, "Third down and a mile and an eighth to go."

BILL.

First race—Our Ship, one that won consistently last fall, seems to be an autumn horse. The gelding has been groomed in sprints on the half mile, and should relish this distance affair. First Pigeon has been going well this summer and will be there if the top one fails. Mariolet is in light enough to be dangerous.

Second race—Makalaw, a winner in New England this summer, seems well placed in this sprint. Has worked well since being shipped and I look forward to a set of brackets. Exhort is a fair sort and should be close. Justa Gal, sharpened on the small tracks, could surprise.

Third race—Waterman did some nice running up North. Gets in light here and I'm going to string along. Titian Kiddie was a star at Charles Town and has a chance. The slow-starting Taunton could be prominent at the feather impost. There is a tip on Miss Symphony if you can go for it.

Fourth race—Irrepressible, a Vanderbilt color-bearer, is rested and reported fit. May lead this bulky field to the wire. Care For did little here yesterday but could awake. Mellicent for the show money.

Fifth race—Sylvia G closed well in a sprint here yesterday. Asked to go a route tomorrow, she may jolt the opposition. Wise Will and The Mauler will be ready to battle it out of the top one makes mistakes.

Sixth race—Shot and Shell is ready for a good effort. Gets in with only steadying weight by taking an apprentice rider. Peedeeque packs a powerful stretch punch and is due respect despite top weight. Ross has a little class and likes the course.

Seventh race—Canimar is at home in these marathon races. This test is at a mile and a quarter and I'm not going to look elsewhere for the winner. Dearsin is fit after circling the half-milers. Wishing Star favors the distance.

Best bet—Our Ship.

1—First Pigeon, Our Ship, Out of Fire.
2—Alahad, Makalaw, Offender.
3—Gay Bride, Titian Kiddie, Waterman.
4—Alexandrine, Tomiana, Good Trade.
5—Spartan Lady, Tiempo, Sylvia G.
6—Shot and Shell, Ross, Peedeeque.
7—Huppy, Wishing Star, Dearsin.

Best bet—Alahad.

Devitt to Rely on Ex-High School Stars in Mercersburg Opener

Team Will Be Of Iron-Man Variety

McNamara Has Squad of Only 16 Men, but Sees Scrappy Eleven.

Faced with the thorny problem of playing Mercersburg Academy, Saturday, Coach Jim McNamara, of Devitt Prep, is relying strongly on ex-high school stars of Central, Tech, Roosevelt, Eastern and Alexandria to find a solution.

Moe Schulman, Tech's All-High center of last year, was appointed captain by McNamara yesterday and today the coach takes his squad to Central Stadium for a scrimmage with Central. With a squad of only 16 men on hand, McNamara again faces the task of molding a virtual iron man team.

Flanking Schulman will be Roosevelt High's two fine guards of last year, Gus Papanicolas and Julius Lewis. Frank Witt, 200-pound Roosevelt tackle, is holding down one tackle berth, and Earl Fox, Eastern's All-High selection, the other.

The end question is more indefinite, but the prospects were improved last week when Johnny Hagarden, brother of Ed Hagarden, Georgetown University's great basketball star, reported. Though weighing only 160, the Syracuse, N. Y., high school star is exceptionally tall and McNamara is grooming him for a regular wing assignment.

Sees Scrappy Club.

Charlie Arnold, of Central, and Art Farquhar, only returning lettermen, are the only other ends available at present. The only other linemen are Botts, formerly of Eastern, and Reds Heider, an outstanding Eastern palyer, but McNamara is counting on these ten experienced and rugged youths to carry the burden throughout the season.

In the backfield, McNamara has a couple of diamonds in the rough in Lee Fones, and Dick Burrell, of Alexandria High. Fones was All-State halfback last year while Burrell was one of the best blocking backs in the Capital area. Ed Lyman, fast-stepping Roosevelt quarterback has been given the field-general duties while Nat Mostow, former Roosevelt boy, and Joe Rush, a candidate from the Midwest, round out the backfield forces.

The coach figures ball carriers like Fones and Lyman, with blockers like Burrell, Mostow and Rush, fortified by the veteran line will give Devitt a scrappy, dangerous club.

In addition to facing Mercersburg, prep school champions of the Eastern coast, Devitt has booked at least four other hard games, namely with Bullis Prep, Staunton Military School, Eastern High and Archmere Academy, of Wilmington, Del. The Mererburg game will be played at Mercersburg.

Devitt scrimmages Central again tomorrow and Gonzaga Wednesday.

See that biggest fish? It weighs 51 pounds and J. T. Scrivener, standing at the right of his prize channel bass, caught it with the little hook shown in the insert after a 25-minute fight. His success prompted T. E. Smoot, standing on the other side of the two fish, to try his luck—and he landed the 35-pound catch also shown in the picture. The catches were made in the Southwest Middles off Point Lookout yesterday in Capt. Brady R. McKay's boat. S. H. Weeder, extreme left, and Howard Smoot, extreme right, were the other members of the party.

Bauer Agani Wins Three-Mile Race

For the second time in a row, Lieut Richard Bauer, of Fort Myer, won the Mike Lynch series of 3-mile foot-races yesterday. Dr. Ben Chitwood, of the Department of Agriculture, was second, keeping pace with the Army man for much of the distance. The series is known as a training series, the next of which will be held, Sunday, from the Fourth Precinct Metropolitan Police Boys Club in Southwest.

On Sunday, October 4, a 5-mile handicap from the Boys Club of Washington will be held. Entries may be made by registered athletes of the District A. A. U. Bauer's time, incidentally, was 16 minutes 37 4-5 seconds.

Session Set Tomorrow By Democratic League

The monthly meeting of the Democratic League of the District will be held at the Hamilton Hotel at 8:30 p. m. tomorrow.

Arthur Clarendon Smith, president of the league, will preside and will discuss methods by which the organization can be of service in the coming campaign. Another speaker will be Frank R. Boykin, Representative from Alabama. Attending the meeting will be the newly formed American-Hellenic Chapter of the league.

Mary Ryan-Sara Moore Match Set for Sunday

Balked by wet courts, Mary Ryan and Sara Moore were unable to play their final-round match of the annual United States Government women's tennis championships yesterday at Potomac Park. They will play Sunday at 2 p. m. Miss Ryan is defending the championship she has won for the past two years.

Milwaukee Wins Minor Play-Off; Enters Series

Indianapolis, Sept. 20 (AP).—Milwaukee, first-place winner in the American Association pennant race, became the league's representative in the Little World Series by defeating Indianapolis today, 5 to 1, to take the final playoff series, four games to one.

2 Undefeated Nines Clash in Post Series

One of the three undefeated teams in The Post Association's city championship week-day sandlot series is due for its first tumble today with Public Works Administration and Potomac & Electric Power Co. colliding on the South Ellipse at 4 p. m.

Each team has won two games in two starts and are tied with Bureau of Investigation for first place in the series. In the other series clash slated for today, Treasury Accounts and Deposits of the Sports Center Government League meets Naval Air Station, champions of the Army and Navy League.

While the Pepcos and PWA will be battling to keep their unbeaten records intact, Accounts and Deposits and Naval Air will be struggling to remain in the series. A defeat for either will eliminate it.

Public Works will probably have to face the clever slants of Lefty Joe Sullivan, one of the ace pitchers of the Pepcos. The Public Works management was indefinite yesterday as to its probable starting pitcher. Naval Air's starting moundsman will probably be Sailor Botzko who pitched the team to the pennant and last week lost a close game, 3 to 2, to the Pepcos.

On the face of their records, PWA and Pepcos take the field about on even terms. Sullivan shut out Procurement Division, champions of the Federal AA League, 7 to 0, but the Pepcos barely squeezed past the Naval Air obstacle. The Pepcos, of course, are the champions of the National Capital League, and the Public Works team holds the Departmental League title.

Orlando Fans 16 At Ft. Hunt Wins

Woodberry, Md., Sept. 20.—Striking out 16 men and allowing but 4 hits, Bennie Orlando, of the Fort Hunt C. C. C. ball club, pitched his team into the finals of the sectional C. C. C. baseball championships with a 15-to-3 victory over the Big Pool team here today. It was the second straight series win for the Fort Hunt team. His strikeout total was a new mark for the league.

Fort Hunt will meet White Hall at the University of Maryland, Saturday, in the final game, for the championship. The Hawes brothers led the Hunt offensive, J. Hawes driving in five runs with a triple and double, and T. Hawes getting three hits.

Manhattan to Play Hoyas Next Year

A third game has been added to Georgetown's 1937 football schedule, it was disclosed last night when H. Gabriel Murphy, graduate manager of athletic, announced that Manhattan will be played October 30 at Griffith Stadium. It will be the fourth game between the two schools.

Georgetown and the Jaspers staged one of the most sensational grid battles ever fought in New York, the game resulting in a 20-20 deadlock. The following season saw Georgetown win a 9-0 victory, repeating last season by the score of 13-0.

The Hoyas' 1937 schedule will be one of the best in the school's history. Games with Pennsylvania and Maryland already have been definitely scheduled, and negotiations are underway for one with Holy Cross.

in the history of the National Amateur.

Fischer had fought through the toughest quarter of the draw, beating off Gus Moreland's great challenge in the fifth round, outlasted the favorite, Johnny Goodman, of Omaha, in the semifinal, and found himself one down on the last tee. Here he hit a great mashie-iron shot across the lake to within 9 feet of the cup, and then with the cameras whirring and McLean's ball flying a foot from the hole in two, he knocked the putt in to even the match. Furthermore, he still had one unbelievable stroke left.

He was on the first green of the thirty-seventh hole in two, 20 feet from the cup, and he pounded his first putt into the cup, to take the championship.

Anderson's 4-Hit Effort Trounces West End Laundry, 15 to 2.

Some four-hit pitching by Anderson carried the George's Radio ball team into a tie for first place in the National City Junior League yesterday as they trounced the West End Laundry, 15 to 2, on the South Ellipse.

The winners are now deadlocked with Simpson's Pharmacy, each with six victories and a loss. They will meet on the East Ellipse, Sunday, in a play-off game. Simpson's composed almost entirely of high school stars, will meet a team consisting mostly of players with only sandlot experience.

The Radio boys gathered 14 hits yesterday off two West End Laundry pitchers, Bright and T. Maloney. Anderson also fanned ten men. Leo Marshall with four hits in five trips to the plate, including a home run and double; Herbie Lusby and Joe Mahone, with a triple and home run respectively, led the attack of the Radio boys.

Winner of Sunday's one-game play-off will meet the J. C. Flood Plumbers team for the championship, Flood's having won the first-half title.

Leonardtown Loses.

Leonardtown, Md., Sept. 20.—The H. B. Leary baseball team of Washington handed the Leonardtown Club a 2-1 defeat here today in a hard-fought game.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Perhaps you noticed, adjacent to the political columns in yesterday's editions, a lengthy cable dispatch from London attempting to clarify the 60-to-40 odds quoted by Lloyds, famous insurance firm, against the re-election of President Roosevelt.

POVICH.

Anyway, four days after it was announced that Lloyds regarded Roosevelt as the 60-to-40 underdog in the forthcoming election, foreign correspondents felt constrained to explain that, actually, Landon was no 40-to-60 favorite, despite the 60-to-40 odds offered against Roosevelt.

And an explanation was probably necessary to those followers of political trends who, unlike the inveterate readers of the sports pages, are very naive about this odds business and perhaps do not, in fact, know the difference between a bookmaker and a bookbinder.

Any fan who ever risked a few bobs with a professional bookmaker on a ball game or a prize fight or a football battle has learned that the bookie has two sets of odds—and that the fact that the Yankees may be quoted 3-to-5 favorites over the Giants in the World Series does not mean that you can get a bet down on the Giants at odds of 5 to 3.

It does mean, though, that you can make a $3 profit on a $5 bet on the Yankees—but if you want to risk your money on the Giants then you run into a new set of odds. The bookies won't reverse the odds for you. There would be no bookmakers' percentage in that. Thus, the likelihood is that they would demand a $4 bet on the Giants against their own $5 on the Yanks if the bettor insists on wagering on the Giants. In other words, the Yanks would be 3 to 5, but the Giants would be 5 to 4.

Likewise there would be no profit for Lloyds in laying $60 against $40 that Landon would win, while accepting wagers of $40 to $60 that Roosevelt will win. No, indeedy. They would doubtless cover with $60 your $40 bet on Roosevelt, but if you wanted to wager on Landon, then the likelihood is that Lloyds would demand even-money. It may not sound right, but business is business and a bookie demands his edge on the bettor.

Out at Griffith Stadium where the small-time gamblers operate daily despite the vigilance of police and club officials, a fan who cares to loiter about the concession stand back of home-plate can learn some striking lessons in odds taking.

I know one daily frequenter of the ball park betting ring who makes a smug profit annually by betting against the favorite, hedging his bets and being satisfied with a small return. It can be done with just a fair break in the luck.

I saw this fellow one day bet on the Washington team against the Yankees when the Yanks were being quoted as favorites before game time. He invested $30 on Washington against $50 offered by the bookie, and then awaited developments.

In the first inning, after the Yankees had gone scoreless, Washington scored four runs and took a 4-0 lead. The odds instantly shifted. Washington now, not the Y

Price of Scrap Gains $1 a Ton; Nears '29 Peak

Heavy Melting Product Brings $18.50 at Top in Steel Market.

Cleveland, Sept. 20.—Scrap holds the limelight, continuing its spectacular rise, a gain of $1 a ton having been made by heavy melting steel at Pittsburgh in the space of a week. At a top of $18.50, this grade is at the level of the second week in September, 1929, and within 75 cents a ton of the peak price, attained in August, 1929. Sale of about 20,000 tons from accumulations of a steelmaker at Pittsburgh indicates belief that present prices are near the top of the movement, says Steel.

With a higher price level supplies are increasing as collections can be made at greater distances from consuming centers. However, increased shipments have not sufficed to hold back prices. A New York firm is high bidder on dismantling nine Government ships which are expected to yield about 10,000 tons.

National operating rate last week rebounded 3 points to 72½ per cent, regaining ground lost the week of Labor Day and coming within half a point of the peak of 73 in the final week of August. Youngstown, Ohio, made the largest gain, 13 points, to 80 per cent; Buffalo and Detroit gained 5 points. Wheeling 6, Cleveland 2½ points to 82 and eastern Pennsylvania half a point to 48. Other producing centers held the rate of the previous week.

Although automotive consumers of steel have not yet outlined their requirements for sheets and other steel, sufficient demand from that and other sources has appeared to give many sheetmakers full order books for the remainder of this year. It is expected that deliveries of sheets and strip will recede further during the fall, under increased specifying by users. The same is true of bars and other products going into miscellaneous fabrication.

Prices for fourth quarter are well settled except for wire products and reinforcing bars, on which definite announcements are expected by the end of this week. Consumers do not appear to have changed their position materially except that they are covering requirements somewhat more broadly as to delivery. Speculative buying seems at a minimum, prompt delivery being of more importance than price in many instances, indicating small stocks and insistent demand for fabrication.

Railroads continue to buy, but sparingly, expected heavy placements not yet developing. Central of Georgia has placed 5,000 tons of rails and a large order for fastenings and an inquiry is expected shortly from the Western Pacific for 100 and 110-pound rails to relay 491 miles of track. This road plans to buy additional cars and locomotives also. Birmingham Southern, subsidiary of the Tennessee company, has bought nine Diesel-electric locomotives.

Steel's composite of scrap prices has advanced 67 cents in the past week to $16.54, the highest since September, 1929, and within 16 cents of the peak of $16.70 in August, 1929. Lifted by scrap the iron and steel composite has risen 12 cents to $34.22. The finished steel composite is unchnaged at $53.

The Market

A Special Correspondent.

Business Boom Foreseen; Foreign News Continues to Give Anxiety; Markets Gain Courage.

New York, Sept. 20.—Mild recovery in stocks at the close of last week was insufficient to wipe out the ground lost in the slow decline that began toward the end of the week. Improvement was nevertheless encouraging, as it began before the recession had eaten far into prices and before any important liquidation had taken place. It was accompanied by a rise in activity, which had sunk low on the combination of profit taking which had followed the Maine election results (regarded as a bull point but largely discounted) and religious holidays.

Trade news of the week was mainly of a routine nature and more favorable than otherwise. The steel industry enjoyed a sharp pick-up in activiy after the Labor Day recession and held near the best of the year, with further talk of price hardening. Railroad traffic, reported for last week, reflected also the Labor Day shutdown. Government surveys on retail and wholesale trade for the whole country indicated a good improvement over last year. Motor industry sales held at a higher level than for the corresponding period of a year ago, but production continued under the summer top, in preparation for autumn models.

Abroad two disturbing elements remained. The fighting in Spain showed no signs of stopping, and the pressure on French currency persisted, resulting in additional large exports of gold from the Bank of France. It seems to be a question of but a short time before France, unless the position changes rapidly, will move to protect her gold, which means devaluation of the franc.

French Finance.

Such an eventuality is both desired and feared in Wall Street. On the one hand it is contended that once France breaks from gold, she will be free to set a value on the franc that can be maintained, that will help to restore foreign trade, and that will bring all round currency stabilization—the latter, incidentally, is likely to be an unrealized hope until this country's fiscal policy becomes clarified. On the other hand, the speculative markets fear that, if franc devaluation is followed by a return to gold, a vast amount of French and other foreign capital that has sought safety and profit in our securities markets will return to Paris. Conceivably that might mean depressed prices for stocks and bonds, higher interest rates consequent upon the export of gold, and possibly a movement to devalue the dollar.

It is difficult to make a guess as to just how French devaluation might take place, but no early withdrawal of foreign money from this side seems probable. Rather the contrary is indicated. Meanwhile discussion of the home position was precipitated by first the remarks of the Republican Vice Presidential candidate, to the effect that our inflationary policy was impairing the soundness of insurance policy owners; and second, by the observations of a well-known banker, who put his finger on the sore spot of the banking position, namely, the high percentage of total bank credit that is tied up in Government bonds.

Talk of Inflation.

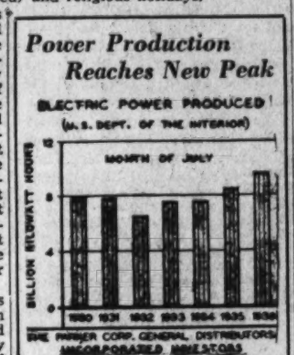
Loud outcry naturally followed the interpretation given in political quarters that the present solvency of the banks and insurance companies was under attack, but doubtless in the end good will be done by drawing attention to the dangers that lie ahead of unlimited spending and continued Government deficits. The road to inflation always had led, and now leads, to impairment of investment value, to bank and private insolvency, and to currency destruction. A halt must be called to this country's rapid progress along that road.

Maintenance of present high prices for Government bonds depends in part on continued cheap money. The Government is working to keep interest rates low, but it could not succeed—except at the expense of stifling business enterprise and thereby increasing its own tax difficulties—if business demands for credit should rise greatly. The banks are willy-nilly financing the Treasury's deficit.

Assuming a substantial rise in interest rates the price of bonds surely would drop. Then the question would be whether the banks were to write down their topheavy investment in Government bonds, amounting to nearly half the public debt, and consequelly be compelled to draw in credit lines and jack up interest rates (to say nothing of insolvency in some cases), or whether they would be allowed to keep books on an unrealistic basis. In either case the Government would find it more expensive to finance itself.

There is ample evidence of a desire on the part of business men to borrow and expand their production and facilities to take advantage of profitable business now in sight. They are largely refusing to yield to the lure under present conditions of uncertainty over the budget, taxation and currency value. It may be regarded as certain that once doubts are cleared away a burst of confidence will follow which will more than offset any slackness that might be expected to follow the ending of Government wasteful spending. However, such a development likely would entail rising interest rates, in time, and then the scattered chickens and crows of the era of high spending would come home to roost.

Power Production Reaches New Peak



Boston, Mass., Sept. 20.—Electric power production in July hit the highest total for any individual month in the history of the industry. Production exceeded July, 1935, by nearly 15 per cent and topped July, 1932 by 48 per cent. In July of last year 43 per cent of the output was by water power and the balance by fuels, whereas in July of this year only 33 per cent was by water power.

Railroads List Gain in Orders For New Cars

22,354 Freight Vehicles on Rolls September 1, Group Reports.

Class 1 railroads of the United States on September 1, this year, had 22,354 new freight cars on order, the Association of American Railroads announced today. This compares with 7,240 cars on order on September 1, last year, and 8,372 cars on order on September 1, 1934.

New locomotives on order on September 1 totaled 70, of which 53 were steam locomotives and 17 were electric and Diesel locomotives. On September 1, last year, there were 9 steam locomotives and 3 electrics on order, and on the same date, 1934, there were 35 steam and 106 electric locomotives on order.

New freight cars placed in service in the first eight months of this year totaled 20,588, compared with 2,819 new cars installed in the corresponding period of 1935, and 14,970 cars placed in service in the same period of 1934.

There were 62 new locomotives placed in service in the eight months period this year, of which 42 were steam locomotives and 20 were electric and Diesel engines. In the corresponding period of 1935, 27 steam and 101 electric locomotives were placed in service, and during this period in 1934, 6 steam and 10 electric locomotives were installed in service.

Insurance Gains Listed.

New paid life insurance of the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Philadelphia, for August, amounted to $2,190,000, an increase of 16.3 per cent over the corresponding period of 1935, according to Walter LeMar Talbot, president.

The decrease in lapsed and surrendered insurance amounted to $435,000, a decrease of 19.9 per cent, as compared with August, 1935.

Consolidated Film Plans to Recapitalize

New York, Sept. 20.—A special meeting of stockholders of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., will be held on October 9 to vote upon a proposed plan of recapitalization which provides for the elimination of accumulated dividends on the present preferred stock, partly through a cash payment, and reduces the fixed annual cumulative dividend on the preferred stock now outstanding from $2 to $1.

The directors propose to declare a dividend of $1 a share on the preferred stock on account of unpaid dividends which, on October 1, 1936, will amount to $5 per share, promptly upon the stockholders' approval of the plan.

Ice Industry Makes $600,000 Ad. Drive

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Plans for a $600,000 national advertising program were announced today at a meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Ice Industries.

A large part of the amount will be devoted to newspaper advertising, while the rest will be used for radio and other mediums, Leslie Smith, secretary, said.

The industry probably will spend about $1,800,000 altogether of newspaper advertising this year after dealers throughout the country have added to the national appropriation, Smith said.

Engineering Contracts Highest for 5 Years

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—Engineering News-Record reported today for the week ended Tuesday private engineering construction awards of $30,513,000, the highest volume in more than five years.

This compared with $4,159,000 in the corresponding period last year. Total awards were placed at $56,382,000, against $24,746,000. Public contracts aggregated $25,869,000, compared with $20,587,000 in the like 1935 week.

Utilities Show Boost in Sales Of Appliances

New Business Advances Domestic Power Load 10 Per Cent.

New York, Sept. 20.—One hundred and thirty-two power utilities sold 22 per cent more domestic electrical appliances in the first half of this year than in the same period of 1935, reports Electrical World in its sixth survey of domestic load building. These additional appliances, together with their lighting sales, boosted their average annual domestic current consumption 10 per cent over the year before. The 132 companies serve 15,396,010 households, about 75 per cent of the entire industry.

These companies' total sales of appliances for the period were $41,355,673. This year they sold 17 per cent more refrigerators, 27 per cent more ranges, 23 per cent more water heaters, 12 per cent more clothes washers, 18 per cent more ironing machines, 20 per cent more vacuum cleaners, and 19 per cent more of all other appliances, than they did in the same period of 1935.

The 132 power companies covered by the survey employed 37 per cent more sales people and spent eight per cent more for advertising to build domestic load, during the first half of 1936, than in the same period of 1935.

The discussion whether or not power companies should sell appliances has continued for years among utility men. So far the "pros" have had the best of it. More companies sell, and their gains in load are larger.

Chain Store Sales Above 1929 Average

New York, Sept. 20.—The Chain Store Age index of 5 and 10 cent department store chain sales in August was approximately 112.0 of the 1929-1931 average for the month taken as 100. The index for the corresponding month of 1935 was 101.0. The indicated comparative increase in sales for this group thus averaged about 1. per cent.

The index of sales of the drug chain group, also regularly reviewed by Chain Store Age, was 122.3 in August this year, as compared with 114.0 in August, 1935, indicating a sales increase of 7.3 per cent.

Mining Corp. Proposal.

New York, Sept. 20.—A special meeting of stockholders of International Mining Corporation for October 19, was called today for consideration of a plan for simplifying the capital structure of the company. The plan, suggested by stockholders who own approximately 57 per cent of the common stock and a substantial amount of the outsanding stock purchase warrants, was approved by the boards. It complates, among other things, formation of a new company.

On the Air Today

Young Washington, returning to school today, is not being overlooked by radio. Broadcast plans favor the Thompson School.

WMAL will be on hand bright and early at the school, Twelfth and L streets northwest (8:30 to 9 a. m.) with Jim McGrath and Hugh MacIlrevey interviewing the youngsters on that time-honored question, "Do you really mind returning to school?"

While WMAL inner offices were deciding on this feature program, WJSV was acting on the same idea. The publicity scribe in N. B. C.'s offices advises that "it is believed this will be the first broadcast of its kind in Washington." Perhaps it will be, but by a slim margin. For WJSV's half-hour airing is set for 3—with Hugh Conover in charge.

Features today:

Michael Strange, actress, first wife of John Barrymore, in some of her poems, "Magazine of the Air," WJSV, at 10 a. m.

More "back to school"—"What Every Freshman Should Know," WMAL, at 2. With student leaders and officials of universities from coast to coast.

Concert Hall—E. Robert Schmitz, French pianist, begins a new series of compositions of Bach and Debussy, WJSV, at 2:35.

Margaret Speaks — Soprano is brought to her regular Monday night audience, WRC, at 7:30, from Basle, Switzerland, by short wave. William Daly Orchestra.

"Trilby"—With Grace Moore and Peter Lorre, as Svengali, in the "Radio Theater," WJSV, at 8. Miss Moore sings "Ben Bolt."

"Ten Years in Retrospect"—First of a new series commemorating N. B. C.'s ten years of broadcasting, WMAL, at 9. Music and dramatization of events of the last decade.

James W. Ford, Communist candidate for Vice President, introduced by Earl Browder, Presidential candidate, talking on "Negro People in the Election," WRC, at 9:45.

The consensus on the trio of new shows that opened last Thursday night over the Columbia net, planned to make inroads into the audience N. B. C. has smugly held for a long period, would indicate that N. B. C. has won the first round. A few scattered votes of approval for the "Then and Now" show give that newcomer the edge, with Kate Smith's full hour receiving free criticism. As for Maj. Bowes—well, it's been an institution less long than "Show Boat" and I doubt that the dyed-in-the-wool "Show Boat" fans will change their Thursday night listening routines to any marked degree.

"Then and Now" apparently holds delightful prospects for many listeners. The Smith show obviously must improve, from what I have heard, to wean Vallee's audience away. To top off the bad news of the week for show producers—the reports on Fred Astaire's show are only so-so.

1. Find the apartment that meets your requirement—in the section in which you want to live.

2. Note the key letters and the number at the end of the ad. For example: D-5.

3. Then find the letter of the alphabet (in this case, D) at the top of the map. This means the apartment is located somewhere between the D at the top and the D at the bottom of the map.

4. Then look for the numeral (in this case, 5) at either side of the map. Where the D and 5 meet is the vicinity in which the apartment is located.

SUPPOSING THE PAYING OF ATHLETES WERE LEGAL— LET'S JUST SEE WHAT WOULD HAPPEN—
NATURALLY, THE FEW BIG SCHOOLS COULD PAY THE MOST MONEY—CONSEQUENTLY, EVERY ATHLETE WOULD WANT TO ENROLL AT A BIG SCHOOL—SMALL SCHOOLS LIKE CARTER COULD NOT PAY AT ALL,—SO THEY WOULD NT ATTRACT MANY ATHLETES, WOULD THEY?

Spain to Assail Aid for Rebels Before League

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 20.—The Spanish government, authoritative sources declared today, will protest to the League of Nations against alleged support of the Fascist rebellion by Germany, Italy and Portugal in disregard of the European "hands off" agreement.

The Spanish delegation to the League, it was learned, went to Geneva armed with what it regarded as incontrovertible evidence the insurgents were receiving "subterranean" aid from those three countries.

Well-informed quarters believed Spain would demand that the League take measures to halt the importation of munitions and supplies for use by the Fascists and will insist on the withdrawal of foreign aviators known to have flown insurgent war planes.

It was believed the delegation would attempt to prove the existence of a pact between Gen. Francisco Franco, commander of the insurgents, and each of the nations it suspects.

Agrees to Concessions.

According to well-defined rumors circulating in the capital, Franco has agreed to various concessions to Germany and Italy if the rebellion succeeds.

The most important concession, the reports indicate, would be to cede the Balearic Islands in the Mediterranean as a war base.

(Reports published in a workers' newspaper in Barcelona today said an Italian force had landed on Mallorca, largest of the Balearic Islands, had hoisted its flag alongside the Fascist banner, and its leader was ruling as a "veritable dictator.")

Germany, the reports said, would be allowed to fortify the city of Ceuta, Morocco, commanding the Straits of Gibraltar and had been promised use of ports on the northwest Spanish coast as strategic refueling bases.

The delegation was understood to possess documentary evidence showing much of the Fascists' supplies were shipped through Portugal and were delivered to Gen. Franco's forces across the Extremadura Province.

Ethiopians Arrive.

Geneva, Sept. 20 (AP).—The Ethiopian delegation to the League of Nations Assembly arrived in Geneva tonight in a fighting mood.

The leader, Warqnex C. Martin, Ethiopian Minister to London, remarked coolly that he'd "heard stories" to the effect that their right as delegates would be challenged.

(Premier Mussolini has asserted Italian delegates would stay away from the League Assembly, convening tomorrow, if the Ethiopians should be seated.)

Martin declared that if the Assembly unseats the Ethiopian delegates an appeal will be made to the World Court.

Hear Woodring.

Acting Secretary of War Woodring spoke to the veterans in the Government Auditorium last night on "The Miracle of Reconciliation," saying that "probably never in the history of the world was such a terrible fratricidal struggle terminated with less permanent ill feeling . . .

"Members of both armies worked together in our legislative halls," Woodring said. "Union and Confederate veterans occupied high executive and judicial positions."

At 10 a. m. today registrations will begin; at 1:30 p. m. the executive committee meets; at 2:30 the national council convenes; at 3 the aides de camp meet with the national commander; at 4 department commanders from various States report, and at 8 there will be a semiofficial meeting of the encampment at Constitution Hall.

Wednesday at 10 a. m. is the hour the veterans are looking forward to, for at that time the delegates parade down Pennsylvania avenue, the same avenue which saw the review of the victorious Union armies before President Andrew Johnson 71 years ago. About 400 will be able to march the six blocks between Twelfth and Eighteenth streets, the rest riding in cars.

Aid Worker Dies As Man, Proves To Be a Woman

San Francisco, Sept. 20 (AP).—A kindly little individual known in San Francisco for 40 years as Jack B. Garland, 67, social worker, former newspaper man and writer, was revealed in death today as a woman.

"Jack" Garland collapsed in a street Friday night and died in a hospital next morning. Dr. Rolla B. Hess, deputy coroner, who performed an autopsy, said today "Jack" was a woman.

A friend, Mrs. Mary Haines, reported "Jack" Garland turned to masquerading as a man years ago to facilitate her desire to help the needy. Associates said her real name was Beatrice Garland.

"Many years ago," said Mrs. Haines, "she witnessed a heartless scene in the office of a private charity organization that moved her to go into the streets at night to help the distressed.

"She found that she was handicapped by her sex. She put on men's clothes to make her work more effective."

Rebels Close In On Madrid, Kill 2,500 Loyalists

Major Victory Claimed With Capital Within Striking Distance.

gents already had buried more than 1,000 loyalist dead, acting quickly to prevent disease.

Rebel victories were reported on several other fronts. An insurgent column on the Asturias front killed 700 Loyalists in an encircling movement in the mountains dominating Cangas de Tineo in Oviedo Province, the rebel radio at Coruna claimed.

The rebel blockade of Bilboa and Santander by land and sea proceeded. Mola sent an ultimatum to Bilboa to surrender or suffer a worse bombardment than was given Irun.

French border authorities at Hendaye received a report that loyal regular troops in the Gareano barracks in Bilbao had revolted against the government, imprisoned their officers and locked themselves in the garrison. If this reported defection is confirmed, it would seriously handicap defense of the city and make likely its early capture by Mola's northern columns.

Fort Filled With Gasoline.

Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 20.—Government forces fired the ruined fortress Alcazar with gasoline today in a futile effort to smoke out the rebels.

Fumes held back government attackers advancing on the ancient barracks, blasted by dynamite last week and shelled for more than eight weeks, with half its 1,700 men, women and children already believed dead.

When is became apparent the gasoline fires would have little effect on a major scale, the Madrid government fighters decided to use them only against definite points where rebels resisted strongly.

Ordering renewal of artillery and machine gun fire against the wrecked fortress, Gen. Jose Asensio asserted his forces would capture the Alcazar without damaging the deep cellars in which he believed the women and children were sheltered while their menfolk carried on the battle.

"The government is taking great care to keep losses as low as possible," he said.

Attacking constantly with relays of fresh troops, Gen. Asensio sought to wear out the defenders, who thus far have defied all efforts to bring about their surrender.

"During the night Fascists made a desperate sortie near the casino," Asensio said. "They were driven back with heavy losses.

"We believe between 50 and 60 of the fast dwindling garrison were killed. Their fire today is much weaker than that of yesterday.

"They cannot hold out much longer. They are now a group of perhaps 200 or 300 desperate men fighting for their lives without food, water or sleep. We are sure they'll have to surrender shortly."

Police Suspended In 'Torture' Death

Uniontown, Pa., Sept. 20 (AP).—Maj. Lynn G. Adams, head of the Pennsylvania State police, suspended today two State troopers charged with killing a man during what Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti referred to as "third degree" questioning.

"I am convinced that a most atrocious crime has been committed against justice," said Adams after investigating the death of 64-year-old Frank C. Monaghan.

The hotel keeper died in a little Bertillon room in the Fayette County Courthouse where he had been taken for questioning after Detective John C. Wall was slashed in the throat. Wall, now recovering from his wounds, had arrested Monaghan. He said Monaghan was driving a car while intoxicated.

Adams joined with Attorney General Margiotti in terming the death a "brutal killing," and added:

War Games Start Today at Ft. Meade

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Sept. 20 (AP).—A two-week series of war games, involving the largest concentration of regular mobile troops in the Third Corps Area since the World War, will open here tomorrow.

The units that will participate in the maneuvers came here by forced marches. This week they will face regimental and brigade problems and next week they will enter defense and attack maneuvers in combined forces.

belief was advanced that the dynamite was set off by residents who sympathized with the Socialist government in the civil war.

Other unofficial sources advanced the charge anarchists might have planted the charges in an effort to foster unrest and precipitate downfall of the government or overthrow of the army.

Many buildings within the midtown area were damaged. Citizens were hurled from their beds. The detonation was heard for many miles.

First unofficial estimates placed property damage at more than $1,000,000. One unofficial source said more than 500 buildings were damaged.

Reserves Are Called.

A short time later hundreds of police reserves called into action found a second truckload of dynamite parked outside the Diario de la Marina office, 10 blocks from El Pais.

Dry cell batteries were connected with more than 1,000 sticks of dynamite. An alarm device was set to explode the truckload at 10:15 a. m.

Explosive experts clipped the wires.

National Police Chief Jose Pedraza stationed guards at all other newspapers in the city and permitted no traffice within a block of any of the plants.

El Pais is owned by Senator Alfredo Hornedo. Diario is directed by the well-known writer, Jose I. Rivero, and is owned by a corporation. Professing conservatism, it gives editorial support to Col. Fulgencio Batista, commander in chief of the Cuban army.

new faces before the pupils today. The Board of Education has made numerous appointments in the last two weeks.

It still has several to make. It must name a principal for the large Central High School. Dr. Harvey A. Smith, principal there last year, is now asistant superintendent of schools in charge ofall white senior high schools.

Temporarily affairs at Central will be under charge of Assistant Principal Lawrence G. Hoover, who is among those mentioned for the head post.

The board's personnel committee has held several conferences on staff appointments, but until yesterday was reported to have received no recommendations for the Central principalship from Dr. Ballou. The superintendent has had under consideration the application of more than a dozen candidates. His recommendation is expected to be acted upon favorably by the committee and passed on to the Board of Education for final approval. This action probably will be taken at the next board meeting September 30, Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, president, said yesterday.

Pupils at Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets northwest, are going to get a chance to tell the world what they think of having to give up their summer freedom. Station WMAL of the National Broadcasting Company is going to carry a half-hour program, from 8:30 to 9 a. m., in which the children will tell their side.

As the pupils arrive for their first day of work Jim McGrath and Hugh McElrevey, NBC announcer, will interview them on such questions as: "Do you really enjoy returning to school? Should home work begin immediately or do you want it discontinued altogether? What is your opinion of teachers in general and what happens at home when you play 'hookey?'" Broadcast positions will be at the school entrance and the adjoining playground.
